What Few White Men Have Ever Been Permitted to See

©American Museum of Natural History.

Still the most difficult of all lands for white men to enter is Tibet, between India and China, and these are among the few photos ever made in Lhasa, the "forbidden city." They were taken by Svydam Cutting and Arthur Vernay, who were forced to wait five years for permission to approach the winter palace (right) of the Dalai Lama, who corresponds to the Pope among millions of Asiatics. The country has no death penalty, instead convicted murderers wear chains the rest of their lives, as shown here (left).

Mauna Loa Speaks, Threatening Thousands
