

With All My Heart

BY SARA CHRISTY

CHAPTER 46
AS THORA DAHL stood in Mrs. Steele's pantry she was thinking of how differently Mr. Marsh looked tonight. She was seeing him all the while Mrs. Steele chattered, standing so erectly, Thora Dahl arranging his tie for him. . . .
"Someone is driving up!"
Mrs. Steele vanished in a flutter of white skirts.

Thora laid a swift hand over her mouth.

The three from Fair Acres were the last to arrive at the white house behind the yew trees. Two cars, empty, were parked near the door. "There is no reason for you to loaf around here alone, Pat," Marsh decided, as he handed Wilma from the car. "Better drive home and come back about 11. That's as long as I want to stay."
"Yes, sir, I'll be here at 11."
When the hands of the kitchen clock pointed to 8, Thora Dahl made a last quick inspection of her domain for the evening. Everything was in readiness. What was she supposed to do? A hum of distant voices told her that the guests were assembled. Would Mrs. Steele appear? Or what?

As Thora stood uncertainly in the serving pantry, she was relieved to hear Mrs. Steele's voice just beyond the swinging door.
"Does everything look all right, Selwyn?"
"Sure, fine."
Thora opened the door a few inches, started to speak, paused. Mrs. Steele was standing close to Mr. Marsh, looking up into his face. One of her hands lay on his black sleeve.
"Selwyn," she said archly, "you're going to tell them . . . about our little secret, aren't you?"
It must have been something in Mr. Marsh's eyes, as he avoided the gaze from that upturned face. Thora Dahl never could have told. With a sudden impulse, she pushed the door wide open.

Hoffman's round face. Her lips were parted as if to emit a scream. Thora laid a swift hand over her mouth and shook her head.
The cook nodded dumbly, tottered back into the kitchen and dropped weakly into a chair. Thora returned to her listening post.
There was no sound from the dining room, save that of chairs being moved, of confused steps. Evidently, the diners were obeying orders. Almost at once, that sneering voice spoke again.
"All youse got to do is act sensible an' youse won't get hurt. Any funny moves an' I'm cuttin' loose. . . . That goes for you, big boy on the end. Keep reachin'."
Holding her breath, Thora pushed on the swinging door slightly. Her eye was close to the opening, trying to glimpse the scene on the other side.
"Hey you, Nigger!" the voice continued. "Start down the line and collect the things I tell you. Put 'em on the table. . . . at this end. I want loose change and jewelry. Get a move on you!"
Thora caught a sight of Jim passing. His face ashen and his eyes bulging from their sockets with terror. "Yes, sah! Yes, sah!" she heard him answer quaveringly. She ventured to widen her outlook by a quarter of an inch.
There he was! The holdup man. Only a few feet from her, his back toward the door. He was a short stocky man wearing a dark cap pulled low on his head. In his right hand was a stubby black gun. Thora looked beyond. There was Wilma, her face white and her black eyes wide with terror. Beside her was Mr. Gordon. His lips were set tightly. It was plain that he was furiously angry. . . . and helpless. If only he wouldn't try to do anything!

Next to Wilma, on the other side, was a shivering elderly woman. She kept wetting her lips with her tongue and her double chin wobbled pitifully. And All Babba next. . . .
His gray eyes were fixed on the man with the gun. His face was peculiarly expressionless, Thora thought. The whole scene was stamping itself on her consciousness with the rapidity of a motion picture. All the details clearly printed. Neither Mrs. Steele nor Mr. Marsh were visible. They must be at the other end of the line.
"Come on, lady. Strip that shiner off your wrist," came the next command. "Toss it over where I can reach it an' make it snappy. That's the thing I come for." Thora saw the man take a step nearer the deserted table. "Hurry up, sister!"
Tears started to Wilma's eyes. She covered her bracelet despairingly with the fingers of her right hand. She turned to Babba with an entreating.
"Alec, don't let him!"
Babba did not stir, but Gordon did and drew a snarling caution. Marsh's voice was heard next, speaking quietly.
"Take it off, Wilma." With shaking fingers she started to comply.
A hot burst of rage made the picture grow dim before Thora Dahl's eyes. This contemptible coward knew about that bracelet. He expected Wilma to wear it. He said that was what he had come for. Thora poised herself in her toes, took a deep breath, thrust the door wide, sprang.
She had but one idea in mind. To lock her muscular young arms about that man from behind, pin his own arms to his side, to hold. . . . and hold.

BASEBALL'S FATE BE DECIDED WEDNESDAY

Powell to Be at Lillington Meeting Tomorrow; Will Decide Then

Fate of organized baseball of any sort for Henderson hangs on a meeting to be held tomorrow night at the court house in Lillington, and Ed Powell will take a group of representatives to the session.
Henderson has been dickering for a berth in the Tobacco State League, a fast semi-pro circuit, but so far has been an odd club, Erwin, Angier, Selma-Smithfield and Sanford making up the circuit last year. Another town must be secured to match Henderson, bringing the league to six clubs.
Dunn and Fayetteville, prominently mentioned for the sixth berth, have failed to fill it. Franklinton, another hope, looms in the offing, but whether that town can muster enough baseball spirit to carry the club through the season is doubtful.
Joe Caviness, president of the Tobacco State, is anxious to have Henderson in the loop, fully knowing the baseball spirit of Henderson. Caviness is a former Piedmont League performer, having played for Henderson when this town had a club in the Piedmont.
Powell will know after Wednesday night's session whether Henderson will have a team in the circuit or whether it will be forced to play independent baseball, if any at all, during the summer months.

DALRYMPLE CAPTAIN OF RED TERRORS

New Leader Played Guard During Last Season and Was Outstanding

College Station, Raleigh, March 17.—Election of Neil Dalrymple as captain of the 1937 North Carolina State basketball team came as a conclusion to one of State's most successful years on the hardwood.
Dalrymple, a Jonesboro boy, was the logical player to succeed Charlie Aycock, Raleigh boy and fine leader of the 1936 team. Dalrymple will be the only senior on the 1937 club. He is a guard and ranked with the best this year. His brilliant game against Duke on January 25 is still regarded as one of the best individual performances of the season.
The 1936 team was one of the best ever developed at State by Coach R. R. Sermon. It won 15 of its regular 18 game schedule, and went to the semi-finals of the Southern tournament. It finished second in the Big Five and in Conference standings.

HI-SPEEDS DEFEAT ROUEMONT, 37-28

Team Boasts of Impressive Record for Season; Meet Warrenton Tomorrow

The Texaco Hi-Speeds got vengeance with a smile against Rougemont, runner-up in the Durham County Independent basketball league, last night at Rougemont, whipping the Durham team, 37 to 28.
Pettis Terrell paced the winners with 13 points and C. Terrell was second with eight points. Bowling, Durham center, was the best for the losers, lopping 12 points through the hoop.
Coach "Bing" Crosby is leaving no stone unturned in his efforts to raise money for the team, and plans to stage a benefit show at Central school soon in an effort to get some ready cash with which to begin work.
The highs could turn out a mighty fine baseball team and one that would go a long way toward a successful season if they were given the opportunity.

GOOD MATERIAL, NO TEAM FACES HIGHS

Athletic Finances Unable to Support Baseball Team As Yet

With probably the best baseball prospects in years, Henderson high school athletic heads were doubtful today whether the school will have a diamond team this year or not.
The main obstacle in the path of a nine is finances, the athletic coffers at the school being sorely depleted. Baseball equipment there has been in use for many years and much of it is worthless.
The highs could turn out a mighty fine baseball team and one that would go a long way toward a successful season if they were given the opportunity.

Road Fatalities Still Declining

February, 28 were pedestrians, while of the 462 injured, 60 were likewise pedestrians, the figures show. Four children were killed and 22 children injured while playing in streets or on highways.
Drunk drivers were listed as being responsible for six fatal accidents and for 69 non-fatal crashes.
Reckless driving and excessive speed were given as the cause of at least 75 per cent of the accidents.

"The bad weather we had in February undoubtedly did more than anything else to reduce the number of killed, injured and the number of accidents," Captain Charles D. Farmer of the State Highway Patrol said, in commenting on the February accident figures. "Snow, ice and rain forced drivers to be more careful than they usually are and also served to reduce the number of cars on the roads."
People Are Aroused
"But next to the bad weather, we believe the second most important factor in the reduced number of fatal accidents is that people have become more safety conscious and are driving more carefully than formerly—which means that the highway patrol and the newspapers have at last begun to get results from the safety campaigns they have been carrying on for years."

Why Gulf is the Gas for March

SURE AND IT'S almost the middle of March—the month the thermometer makes an average jump of 5 to 13 degrees. The Moral? That your gas should fit the season! If it doesn't, you don't get maximum mileage. Switch to That Good Gulf—it's "Kept in Step with the Calendar"—so all of it goes to work, none of it goes to waste!

Sound, Prudent Banking Principles

Sound, prudent banking principles . . . a thorough knowledge of local trade and credit conditions . . . an able staff, schooled in the ways of promptness, accuracy and hearty co-operation . . . these are the foundations on which pleasant and profitable banking relations are built.
