PROGRAMS BY CHOIRS

All Churches To Hear Music Appropriate to Occasion; Good Weather Promised With Large Crowds

Church-goers of Henderson looked forward today to religious services in all local churches tomorrow in which the Easter theme will predominate.

Churches have worked for weeks on special music for the morning, and elaborate programs have been arranged and worked into the order of service for forenoon worship periods.

In some instances classes of children and adults will be received into membership of the church. Preparations for this ordinance also have already been made by the pastors of the churches where such services will be held during the morning period.

Sunday schools of the churches will also aim their programs for the day toward a full observation of Easter.

While the Easter cantata, "Olivet to Calvary," was presented by the choir and several assistants at the First Baptist church last night, the church, will, of course, join with the others in re-emphasizing the significance and meaning of Easter during their Easter Sunday morning services.

Some churches will not have evening worship hours, following the full and elaborate set-ups presented in the forenoon.

Interior of Warehouse During Henderson Exposition

This is a view of the interior of the warehouse during the progress of the Henderson Exposition a few years ago, giving an impression of its beauty and attractive arrangement. The 1936 exposition will be held the week of April 20-25, and final arrangements are now being made for the big event, which is only ten days off. D. C. Loughlin, manager of the exposition for the sponsors, the local post of the American Legion, says the outlook is for the best show of the kind ever offered in Henderson.

Feel Extra Legislature Is Unlikely

ture is regarded as even more remote than a special session in North Carolina.

Might Do More Harm

At the present time Governor Ehringhaus is convinced that even if a special session could do something to help the farmers, and even if Congress should pass the State pacts enabling act now before it, and South Carolina should pass its act, that it might do more to injure the State and the farmers than to help them, those to him agree. For in North Carolina the governor has no veto power and hence no power to limit the deliberations of a special session to the matters indicated in the call.

So while the governor might call the legislature for the purpose of considering tobacco crop control legislation, there would be nothing to keep it from considering and enacting any legislation that might be proposed, from the sales tax to liquor.

Chance for McDonald

It is generally agreed that one of the principal reasons Dr. McDonald would like to have a special session is that it would give him a chance to renew his fight against the sales tax and use the legislature as a sounding board and amplifier for the campaign speeches he could make in the house, of which he would be a member. It is also agreed that a special session would give Graham an opportunity to renew legislative contacts as lieutenant governor and to push his liquor control plans.
