vacations to the population in the various counties was not then available. The percentage table was just completed today and released without any comment by the highway safety division.

There are three counties in the State in which not a single license has been revoked for drunken driving or any other violation of State drivers' license law, the figure show. These are Clay, Graham and Mitchell counties, all in the western part of the State, while Alleghany county had only one revocation and Dare, Surry and Swain counties only two revocations each, while Hyde, Macon and Orange counties have had only three revocations each since the law went into effect November 1, 1935.

The percentage of driving license revocations to the population in some of the other counties, as well as the actual number of revocations, follow:

of Raeford, was convicted of drunken driving before Judge W. B. McQueen of the recorder's court there, who revoked his drivers' license for only three months, although the State law makes it mandatory that it be revoked for one year. At the end of 90 days, McQueen gave Williams a permit to drive, regardless of the State law, when Williams was arrested and taken before Judge McQueen again for driving without a license, he was dismissed and the highway patrolman reprimanded. Recently Patrolman R. M. Brooks again saw Williams driving a car, went before the grand jury and secured a true bill against him. Judge Parker, who was presiding over superior court, issued a capias for Williams. When officers found him, he was drunk, but maintained he had not been driving while drunk. But the jury convicted him of driving while drunk and Judge Parker sentenced him to 18 months on the roads and to four months more for driving while his license had been revoked. Judge Parker also reprimanded Judge McQueen from the bench, telling him:

"I don't know what I should do with you. You are a party to aiding and abetting in breaking down the laws you are sworn to uphold and enforce."

The records of the highway safety division on William were also presented to the grand jury by Arthur Faulk, director of the division.

Lasky. He sings "One Rainy Afternoon," while the other song is sung by Seger Ellis and Margaret Warner.

Five Famous Comedians

Ida Lupino plays the romantic Czech's leading lady in this sparkling Parisian comedy depicting the amazing developments that ensue when a handsome young man kisses a strange beauty in a dark movie theatre, while five famous comedians play important supporting roles, Hugh Herbert, Roland Young, Erik Rhodes, Joseph Cawthorn and Donald Meek.

The music of both songs was written by Ralph Irwin, Jack Stern and Harry Tobias collaborated on the lyrics of "One Rainy Afternoon" while those of "Secret Rendezvous" are from the pen of Preston Sturges. Stephen Morehouse Avery prepared the screenplay and dialogue from the French story "Monsieur Sans Gene." Additional dialogue was contributed by Maurice Hanline.

Rowland V Lee directed the comedy, while Pevecel Marley is responsible for the photography. "One Rainy Afternoon" is released through United Artists.

he is untrained, anyway? HIS ATTITUDE?

The Democratic criticism of Landon is that he generalizes—suggests ideals that are all right, but fails to explain how he proposes to realize them.

He has supporters who want him to tell how.

Possibly he doesn't know. He is honest enough to imply as much, if so.

In any event, he does not like what the New Deal seems to be trying to accomplish. That is as far as he goes. He says, in effect, that, even if he has not a program, neither has the New Deal.

NO VIOLENT ATTACK

The G. O. P. management wants a violent attack upon Rooseveltism and Landon has not delivered one yet.

The governor did not take the offensive in his presidential "acceptance address." He was only philosophic at West Middlesex and thenceforward. He did not tear into the opposition and, while he did express sentiments of his own, he did not go into details.

Particulars are what the Democrats are demanding and particulars are what the Republican management wants them to be met with.
