Secret Committee Will Pass on Projects Asking Merchants' Aid

In their campaign to sign merchants of the city against the use of spurious or freakish advertising schemes, the Junior Chamber of Commerce has signed about 75 business concerns. It was learned today from Sam Alford, a prominent leader in the Junior chamber.

The committee will recommend to the business community what is legitimate and what not of the numerous schemes that are brought in from time to time.

The merchants themselves have pledged themselves not to place any advertising of any kind with any person or persons, except newspaper advertisements, unless the advertising committee approves the proposal, whatever it may be.

Mr. Alford said he believed those who signed the agreements would respect them and the decisions of the committee that has been planned to function in that respect.

WINTER GRID WORK AT U. N. C. DRAWS 80

Practice work was held this week under the supervision of Lieutenants Johnny Vaught and Bill Lange. Head Coach Ray Wolf, who has been at the bedside of his sick-mother-in-law at Graham, Tex., for the past ten days, is expected to return during the week-end.

The big squad was compelled to work indoors three days on account of the weather. Coaches Lange and Vaught devoted most of the drills to calisthenics, singing, blocking, and tackling fundamentals.

The White Phantoms will open the competition Monday night by battling North Carolina State's fast-stepping Red Terrors here in a return meeting, and on the following night play host to Davidson in a second engagement between the Tar Heels and Wildcats.

LEGISLATIVE CHATTER

Daily Dispatch Bureau. In the Sir Walter Hotel, Raleigh, Jan. 30.—Those on the inside and who often know just what makes the legislative wheels go round are whispering that thousands of federal patronage are disturbing law makers who want to vote against ratification of the child labor amendment.

Those scions, undercover operates report, know just what kind of machine Jim Farley runs and the kind of tabs he keeps on friends and foes of the administration, whose full powers are being exerted to put over the amendment. Therefore, the story runs, they will hesitate for a long time to antagonize the Washington powers—that-be, for every politician—and most legislators are—has an eye on a good soft Federal post.

Those who thought the reapportionment debate produced fireworks just "ain't seen nothing yet." Let them tune in on the child labor amendment debate Monday. They'll get two careful (or is it careful) of "dangerous encroachment on the sovereign powers of our children," "Stand by our great President," and other resounding oratorical phrases.

Echoes of the reapportionment fight ... "Pete" Murphy, telling the House Mecklenburg and Guilford ought not to want anything because "Mecklenburg has the Hornet's Nest Riflemen and the Mecklenburg Declaration; Guilford has the Guilford Courthouse Battlefield and the Keeley Institute" ... New Hanover's Tom Cooper consulting "all the male dealers I could find every one of them thought this bill unconstitutional. No three lawyers could agree" ... Rupert Pickens, author of the measure declining to yield for questioning ... Willie Lee Lumpkin using the debate as a vehicle for his anti-administration propaganda ... Cherokee's Harry Cooper, farthest west, voting "No".

Advance rumors of wholesale "trading" were hardly borne out by the reapportionment vote. It seems many western representatives who were naturally expected to be for the bill reached the honest conclusion the measure was unconstitutional.

Nobody ever found out exactly why the huge pile of whisky bottles and fruit jars was brought into the hall of the House for the liquor hearing Thursday afternoon. They were conspicuously placed under personal direction of a large lady who wore a red hat and was said to be one of the "drys." But about the middle of the hearing somebody ordered them taken out and quite a diversion came when a page dropped several bottles with a resounding crash. One wag suggested the bottles had been found Thursday morning in rooms of the legislators. "Then they didn't get half of them" retorted another. "There are only a couple of hundred bottles in that pile."

Those who thought a group had been found who did not object to being taxed by the State were brought back from the land where dreams come true to this mundane sphere recently. At an early revenue committee hearing Commissioner of Revenue A. J. Maxwell said the State Fair Association agreed there should be no exemption from taxation for carnivals showing in connection with agricultural fairs.

A day or two ago this was shown to be a misconception as fair association officials appeared and protested vigorously against levying a $200 tax on carnivals showing anywhere, whether at fairs or not.
