LILACS.

Great clusters of pale lavender flowers shading to amethyst, unopened buds, foaming sprays of cool snowy white lilies in an old jar of gray stone—let in this room at this edge of evening—when their delicate fragrance drifts out in cool waves,

I can close my eyes and see again a remembered countryside; almost I can hear the high trill of frogs trilling, though, of course, there are no frogs in the city—and when I open my eyes again there are only these flowers, beautiful under lamplight;

pale lavender, rich amethyst and white, whiter than new-fallen snow.
