other Federal officials and experts in Washington, he said today. The southern officials will urge the adoption of a high "parity" price for cotton and will cooperate in seeking plan whereby the domestic price can be pegged at the figure adopted. While representatives of the cotton growing states have taken 20 cents as the price which would put cotton on a parity with other commodities and with the general cost of living, Secretary Wallace has heretofore favored spending some time with her sister, 17 cents. Cotton is now selling below 12 cents, some days below 11.

Some form of crop control, or at least complete control of the domes tic market and the amount of cotton to be sold on it is absolutely essential to raising cotton prices to anything like the parity figures, Mr. Scott said. He added that whatever is done at the Monday conference, little effect can be anticipated this year, except by way, perhaps, of pegging the price in the heighborhood of 12 cents, through Federal loans to farmers who are willing to deposit their cotton in federal warehouses. He expressed no opinion as to the advicibility of this plan, but said that the President has the power to authorize 12-cent loans on cotton, through the Federal Commodities Corporation.

Any plan which is ultimately worked out, Mr. Scott feels, should assure the farmer of a high price for cotton on the domestic market, but should leave him free to compete in the world market on his own account and without benefit of government assistance. Thus it would be necessary to adopt some form of control which would stabilize the domestic market, while at the same time allowing the grower to produce as much cotton as he chose to ship to world markets. This, Mr. Scott said, would necessitate something along the general line of

As for North Carolinas present cotton outlook, Mr. Scott said that there has been an increasing danger of weevil infestation, but added that the latest crop reports showed 11 per cent out any real indication that the crop would be below normal as to its yield

See little sister, all dressed up in her pretty new frock! Mother has had such a gay time making this Marian Martin style, pattern 9374, that she's going to do another version of the same design for older sister. A cunning yoke, fastened with three buttons a roll collar that flatters tiny round faces, and cheery puffed sleeves are just what little girls adore, while the full gored skirt allows plenty of action-room for sturdy legs. Make this model for your little girl and she'll be well dressed wherever she goes. Big sister's frock has a tie-sash that gives her a charming waistline. Made in a dainty dimity or nainsook, with match ing panties. This frock will be the hit of the kiddie "ashion parade." Complete diagrammed Marian Martin Sew Chart included.
