It goes without saying that in an acute upset of the stomach the best flex, in which case food by mouth is distinctly contra-indicated.

The preparatory work of the stomach consists in churning and mixing should be the exactly the food so that it is reduced to a ject for such treatment mass which is easy for the intestinal juices to get at. But if the stomach appears to have difficulty in doing this the cook can do it just as well.

Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

Purced vegetables, finely minced meat, soups, easily digested desserts such as ice cream—toast rather than fresh bread (which gets lumpy when the stomach function is slow), and other items of the smooth diet, are in order. Such diets are good for those chronic dyspeptics who are long and thin, who never have much of an appetite, who have dropped stomachs, and constitutionally distrust their digestion along with everything else in the universe.

Hyperacidity applies to the condition of having too much acid secreted by the stomach walls. It is

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D. very often a sign of ulcer, but may occur as a nervous reflex. The symptoms are quite characteristic and consist of a feeling of discomfort in the pit of the stomach usually reing what kind of food to order in the pit of the stomach, usually rethe third is that the stomach tends to right its own wrongs by emptying itself at the slightest provocation.

It goes without saying that in an because soda neutralizes their acid.

Diet will do much for them. The food to give is none at all. In the first place the patient heartily agrees with this (if he can be said to do anything heartily) and, most important, the "stomach" upset may be stutte appendicitis or some other redex, in which case food by mouth is should be lean and broiled, so as to distinct the stomach of the stomac make it as tender and soft as possible. The breast of a spring chicken should be the exactly proper sub-

> I have known one such dyspeptic who repaired to a restaurant every who repaired to a restaurant every night before going to bed and ate a dozen raw oysters. They too satu-rated his hydrochloric acid. Fried foods are likely to upset this type. Toast or stale bread is better for them than fresh.

Anything which stimulates hy-drochloric acid must be avoided the three S's, sweet, sour and spiced foods. Pureed vegetables are in order. Mashed potatoes are perfect.
