TODAY'S BIRTHDAYS

Lillian D. Wald of Henry Street, New York, famed social settlement worker, born in Ohio, 72 years ago.
Mary Joseph Fels of New York, philanthropist, widow of the noted soap manufacturer and philanthropist, born in Germany, 76 years ago.
Mary Mills Patrick of Palo Alto, Cal., president emerita of the Istanbul Woman's College in Turkey, born at Canterbury, N. H., 89 years ago.
Anna Hyatt Huntington of New York, famed sculptor, born at Cambridge, Mass., 63 years ago.
Dr. George W. Lewis, director of aeronautical research for the National Committee for Aeronautics, Washington, born at Ithaca, N. Y., 57 years ago.
Wallace Murray, the Department of State's Chief of the Division of Near Eastern Affairs, born at Bardonia, Ky., 52 years ago.

TODAY'S HOROSCOPE

Today's indications are for an agitator. In the calmer natures it will produce a reformer of social character; in the more contentious, a soldier, political leader or even a radical. There is an incisive, sharp intellect that may lead to great distinction, if the effort is made not to excite the passions of men.

What Do You Know About North Carolina?

By FRED H. MAY

- 1. What is the result of exchange of citizens between the states of New York and North Carolina?
2. What leadership did North Carolina take among all states in 1849 concerning practicing physicians?
3. What was the Connor Act of 1885?
4. How many children are in the orphanages of North Carolina?
5. How many livestock was each inhabitant of Edenton allowed to keep within the town?
6. What monopoly did North Carolinians have on the offices of the Twenty-Fifth Congress?

ANSWERS

- 1. North Carolina has lost heavily. There are 4,284 persons born in North Carolina now living in the State of New York, as against the 5,340 New Yorkers who have moved their citizenship to North Carolina.
2. It was the first state to establish by law a board of medical examiners, and to require all doctors to be examined and licensed by this board before practicing their profession.
3. The Connor Act was introduced in the legislature by Henry Groves Connor, senator from Wilson county. It was an act requiring deeds to be registered, placing an unregistered deed on practically the same basis as an unregistered mortgage. Up to that time the lack of laws protecting titles to property had kept foreign capital from coming into the State.
4. A total of approximately 5,500.
5. An act of the general assembly of 1745 allowed each inhabitant to keep six head of sheep, one cow and one horse for each lot owned. This number for each inhabitant was allowed to run at large.
6. The President of the United States was Andrew Jackson. James K. Polk was speaker of the House, William R. King President pro tem of the Senate and Asbury Dickens was secretary of the Senate, all North Carolina born men.

Block Effort At Switching Test Farms

Daily Dispatch Bureau, In the Sir Walter Hotel. By LYNN NISBET
Raleigh, March 10.—The strategy of Larry Burgin, a dairy farmer who is serving his second term as representative from Henderson county, blocked efforts of a small but very determined group of westerners to override the committee on agriculture and by special legislative act remove the six test farms from the State Department of Agriculture and put them under administration of the central experiment station, which is essentially an adjunct of State College.

Representative John F. White, of Chowan, introduced a bill effecting the transfer and under suspension of the rules had it placed on the calendar and set as a special order for next Tuesday. This was done so quickly that it was several seconds before a large number of members realized what had happened. Then Burgin got busy and rounded up support for a motion to have the bill referred to the committee on agriculture.

culture. Discussion of that motion brought formally to the floor of the House for the first time the almost weird story of procedure in this matter.

There hadn't been a bill offered about it before today, but the issue was raised at an early meeting of the committee on agriculture. Half a dozen public hearings have been held, at all of which Dean Schaub appeared in his tri-tone capacity of dean, director of extension and acting director of the experiment station, and asked that the farms and the money to run them be transferred to his jurisdiction. A sub-committee was appointed to study that particular question, along with others concerning the agricultural program, and finally a "sub-committee" was named. This last group of five came to be dubbed "the super-suds" committee.

The super-suds group reached a compromise agreement, but it was not acceptable to the sub-committee. The super-suds had three men from central eastern counties and two from piedmont counties, with no representation at all from the western half of the State. The full sub-committee has representatives from all sections. The full committee would not go along with the small eastern group. With commendable consistency and tenacity, that small eastern group is staying right with the determination to move the test farms even though the middle and western part of the State doesn't want them transferred. Failing in committee, sub-committee, and sub-sub-committee, the group took its cause to the whole membership. Airtiness of the Henderson dairyman blocked the smooth running of the plan to get House action without committee consideration.

Mr. White denied that he had any idea of trying to take advantage of anybody. He said that he didn't believe the committee was ever going to report, and he wanted action. Mr. Everett, from Halifax, who served on all the committees, said the matter had been considered "for 30 years" and that there was no need to send it back to a committee. Mr. Burgin was supported by Representative Mull and other westerners who voiced some resentment at the tactics employed to do by indirection what the easterners had been unable to do through parliamentary procedure, and the bill was taken from the calendar.

There was some difference of opinion around the Capitol just after that vote as to who had really won a victory. General belief is that the White bill would have passed the House and been killed very dead in the Senate. That would have prevented further consideration of the same subject matter this session and would have assured two years more of the present situation. It may be that the opponents of transferring the test farms did not win as much as they thought they were winning in getting the White bill referred to a committee and keeping the issue alive.

Barrett Says Industry Has Shown Guilt

In the Sir Walter Hotel. Daily Dispatch Bureau, By LYNN NISBET
Raleigh, March 10.—Declaring that the proposed wage-hour legislation made no specific charges against any industry or business, but that twenty three industries had rushed to Raleigh to plead guilty of exploiting labor, by saying that enactment of the bills would ruin them, James F. Barrett, southern director of publicity for the American Federation of Labor, closed the public hearings on the bills yesterday.

Proponents of the bills had the day. Barrett followed State Labor Commissioner Forrest H. Shuford, who asked that the principles in these bills be enacted into law. Mr. Shuford believes that capital is seeking investment in progressive rather than backward states, and contrasted development in states with modern labor laws and those without decent regulations.

Speaking very briefly by way of offering moral support, was J. D. Carter, of Spencer, for the "big four" railroad brotherhoods. The measure would not effect them, but he made was elected president of the Henderson Post 1 of the T. P. A. of North Carolina at a meeting held last Saturday night in the Vance Hotel.

Dr. White Eagle, the Indian Chief, who has been in Henderson for the past several days introducing and distributing his medicines, will remain in the city all this week. Large crowds from this and adjoining counties have attended his lectures each day given at 2:30 o'clock on Garnett street in front of Liberty park.

E. M. Rollins and R. G. Kittrell went to Raleigh Monday afternoon to be present at the conclusion of the Legislature.

It clear that his groups supported it as a forward step.

Barrett started his two-hour address with what was almost a parody on the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, long known as the "roll call of the faithful." Beginning with Aycock he named the leaders in North Carolina thought who had contributed to the bills under discussion by developing a social conscience in the State. A great deal of the credit he gave to Governor Hoey, who as a mere lad introduced in the Senate the bill setting up the State Department of Labor, and who in his inaugural address two years ago declared one of the objectives of his administration to be progressive legislation in behalf of labor.

Referring to the pleadings of industry that imposition of minimum wages and maximum hours as set out in the proposed bills would bankrupt many businesses, Barrett said there was nothing new in this argument. He recalled that 30 years ago, when he came with others before a legislative committee and asked that the maximum hours of women in industry be reduced from 72 to 66 in a week, that the same plaintive wails were heard. But the reduction in women's working hours was made, then again to 60 hours, and to 48 and to 40—and all the while industry was not only not ruined but actually prospered more than ever. Surely some business enterprise will fail, but it should not be charged up to the employees when managers prove to be incompetent. He found significance in the fact that the larger and more prosperous merchants didn't appear when the less capable ones opposed the law.

Paying his respects to the Eastern Carolina Chamber of Commerce, Barrett said that the sectional attitude toward legislation had done more to retard progress in North Carolina than any other factor. He quoted Kipling's "East and West" and said that the ballad applied exactly to North Carolina. Then he appealed to the committee members to be strong men, to view the State as a whole, to look not only to the east and to the west, but also to the great industrial Piedmont where the boys and girls from mountains and seashore come to find employment.

Those who criticize the South for lack of progress just don't know what they are talking about, he said. The South has made more actual progress in the past 75 years than any other section in the world has made in the same time, and this proposed regulation of wages and hours would be a long forward step to further progress.

His final appeal, accented by wiping a few tears from his cheek, was that the members should think of the working man's pay envelope not as holding a few dollars and cents, but as holding the food and clothing and medicine and education and entertainment of the workman and his family. The committee was impressed, but many of them were not convinced.
