

Efird Named State Manager Of Lee Gravely Campaign

Daily Dispatch Bureau, In the Sir Walter Hotel.

Raleigh, March 7.—L. Lee Gravely, one of the candidates for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, today announced appointment of Representative Crayon C. Efird of Albemarle as the Gravely state campaign manager.

Principal implication of the appointment (which, incidentally, was exclusively forecast by this Bureau several weeks ago) is that Gravely will make opposition to diversion of highway funds one of his main issues.

This appears certain in view of the fact that Mr. Efird, in the 1939 legislature, was one of the outstanding opponents of diversion, and because it is prominently stressed in the release from Gravely headquarters announcing the appointment.

The Efird appointment also means that the Gravely campaign, which has been going on without much publicity of late, will begin to hit front pages with greater frequency as the new manager will doubtless open headquarters and go to them soon.

There was nothing in the release to indicate where Gravely headquarters will be located; but unless the candidate has changed his mind they will be here in Raleigh. Some weeks ago he told your reporter so in that many words; though there have been published reports from other sources that Gravely's main headquarters will be in Charlotte.

Efird is a former State senator and a past president of the North Carolina Truck Owners Association. He is only 35, but occupies a prominent place in the business life of his home section.

Of the appointee Mr. Gravely said: "He has a thorough knowledge of the needs of our State and I am most happy to have him associated with me in the direction of my campaign."

European belligerents continue to drop leaflets on the enemy populace. This is one war which is being fought down to the last printing press.

What this country really needs, according to the man at the next desk, is a road map which can be opened without everyone first being forced to get out of the car. The man at the next desk has discovered there is an English village which bears the name Out of Sight. A monicker like that is perfect for a town during a blackout.

If you grease your salad with mayonnaise before you add the dressings in they will keep better and the mayonnaise will give your salad an extra nice flavor.

The man at the next desk says he hopes we don't have many more severe winters such as this one was. The polar bears are liable to start coming south each autumn.

A western state is experimenting with cast-iron roadways. Will the pedestrians of the future land with a resounding clang instead of a dull thud?

CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT
BRENT, WITH Cissie, looked down from the window and saw Romany and Baxter Free as they clung in a long kiss beside the car.

"Do you see what I see?" Cissie nodded. "I—guess that's that! And if you ask me, I think I've done a very nice job of playing cupid. Aren't they a lovely couple?" Brent sighed, taking Cissie's arm. "They certainly are. But I don't suppose we should be standing here like a couple of Peeping Toms."

He piloted Cissie to his quarters down the hall and opened the door. She walked in uncertainly. But when the door had closed behind them she was in his arms. "Cissie!" Brent found her lips. "My darling."

In Brent's arms in a big chair a little later, Cissie stroked his blond hair dreamily. "I've been so worried, I'd have died if Romany had loved you."

Brent kissed Cissie again. "The triangle had me a bit worried, too. I knew the first time I saw you that there could never be another woman for me. I was crazy about Romany. But what I feel for you is the real thing. I'm sure you know that."

Cissie teased: "You're not fooling me. You couldn't get very far with the younger generation, so you're marrying me because I look like my niece."

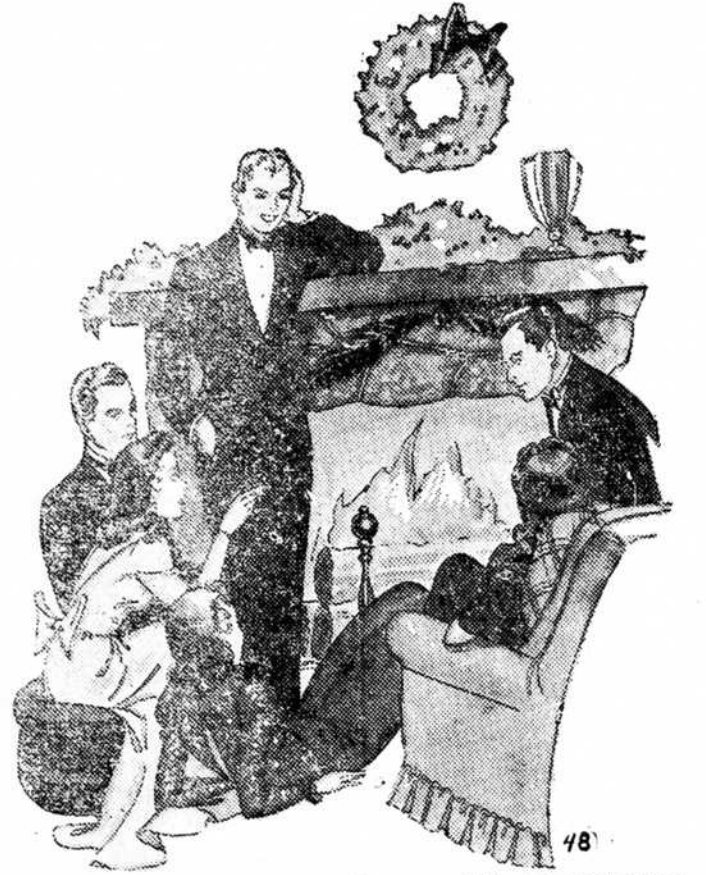

Brent stopped her with another kiss. Then Cissie began making plans. "We can have a double wedding. Or a triple one if Dover and Cholly would like to be married with us."

"I'd like to be married here in the country," Brent decided happily. "Being a farmer boy, I do hope mother will approve of my marrying a city gal!"

A little later Cissie decided they would create a scandal if they stayed in Brent's quarters much longer. She pushed him away reluctantly. "Let's go down and tell Bax and Romany the big news."

In the living room, Romany and Bax parted hurriedly when they heard footsteps. Cissie and Brent entered, holding hands. Cissie sang out gayly: "Oh, darling! I'm so glad you got home! I've something terribly important to tell you. Brent and I are going to be married!"

Romany and Bax both looked thunderstruck. "Married!" Romany said, bewildered. "Married! You and Brent?" Then with a little yelp of joy she threw herself into her aunt's arms. "Oh, Cissie, darling! I'm so glad. Oh—I'm so glad!"

Before the open fire they were going over all the things that had happened.

Her great relief was written all over her face. Brent laughed when Bax wrung his hands and slapped him on the back like a man beside himself with joy.

It was New Year's Eve. Romany and Bax, Cholly and Dover, Cissie and Brent had decided there was no better place in the world to see the old year out than at the farm. Before the open fire they were going over all that had happened in such a short while. Cissie chided: "You didn't even suspect Brent and me, Romey! Didn't you know we were sneaking off to the theater and holding hands behind your back?"

"How awful!" Romany tried to look properly horrified. "Two-timing me, eh? It's a pretty awful world when you can't even trust your own aunt!"

Brent grinned: "I never could resist nice old aunts!"

Later, Dover rose to propose a toast to Charlotte, who sat proudly looking at her newly acquired silver statue on the mantel.

"To Miss Television. Long may she wave."

There was a triple Easter wedding at the farm. A select group of old friends and relatives attended. Mr. and Mrs. Terry O'Rourke were among those present. Myra looked very happy in her wheel chair beside her husband, because she had just been told that in six months she might be walking again.

And Terry was a regular member of the staff of Interstate, through the special efforts of his fraternity brother, Brent Nelson. His new fifteen-minute afternoon radio spot was said to be catching on very nicely.

Carrie Hayworth would have liked her son's wedding to be a society affair that would have rocked the Gold Coast. But when she saw the Nelsons, the Hayworths and the Trees standing united under the great bower of lilies and ferns in the old living room, she changed her mind.

"Somehow," she told her wealthy husband that night at home, "there was something sweet and old-fashioned about it. I've a feeling all those marriages will last."

Did This Girl Know WHY Her Brother Was Killed?

"All the clues you want," growled McDonald, who was investigating the mysterious Markham murder, "but where's the motive?" Pretty Louise Markham could have told the police a curious secret about her brother's past, but family pride was too strong.

How good a detective are you? Read the first five chapters of this fascinating thriller, then try to pick Alfred Markham's murderer.

Modest Gains In Stock Mart

New York, March 7.—(AP)—The stock market's rally met a little resistance today but leaders generally managed to cling to modest advances. Profit taking on Wednesday's bulge slowed the list after an active opening and many issues erased initial gains. Near the fourth hour small declines were plentiful.
