British "Calling Card" Dropped in Germany

The German caption on this picture says this is one of the incendiary disks which have been released in large quantities on the Reich by R.A.F. pilots. Split open, the card reveals a self-igniting phosphorous mixture. The cards act as miniature delayed fire-bombs, which spring into flames after they are dropped, causing destruction to crops and other property. Photo radioed from Berlin to New York.

Heart of Berlin Bombed by British Fliers

C. P. Radiophoto

This crater was blasted in Berlin's Unter den Linden by a British bomb during the R.A.F.'s greatest raid on the German capital. In background is the Brandenburg Gate in the heart of the city. Nazi authorities admit the gate and the old Reichstag Building were both hit by bombs. London also claimed direct hits on the Potsdam Railroad Station in the center of Berlin. Photo was flashed by radio to New York.
