Congregations of Christ and First Churches Become One; Arrangements Completed for Service Sunday Morning

Plans for the formal merger of the congregations of Christ and First churches into one church, which was announced last Sunday by Dr. S. W. Taylor, pastor of Christ church, and Dr. J. E. Reynolds, pastor of First church, were completed today. The arrangements for the service Sunday morning were completed by the two pastors and the members of both churches.

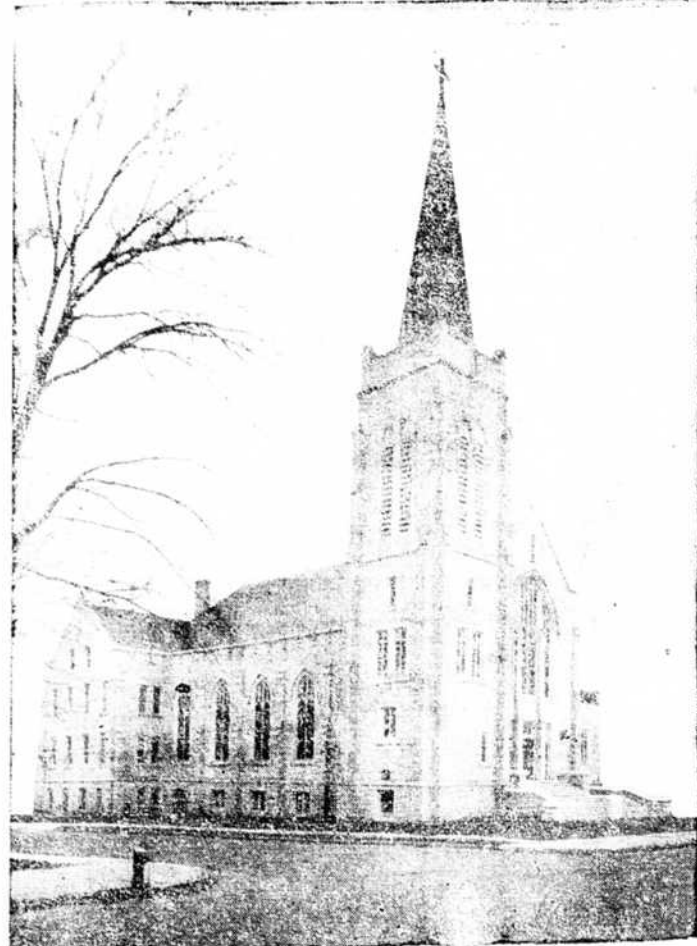

The service will be held at 10 o'clock Sunday morning in the First church building. Dr. Taylor will preach the sermon on the subject of "The Church of the Future." Dr. Reynolds will read the opening prayer.

The new church will be known as the First Methodist church. The building will be the First church building, which was built in 1889. The Christ church building, which was built in 1911, will be used for other purposes.

Three Days Rainfall Is 4.33 Inches

Precipitation here during the three-day rainfall that started Monday evening and let up Thursday night measured 4.33 inches, H. L. Allen, official Weather Bureau observer, announced today. It was the heaviest continuous rain here since the protracted season last August that resulted in unprecedented floods in the Roanoke river north of Henderson.

The rain ended during Thursday night, however, and today the skies were clear and the sun shined most of the day. Temperatures were rather moderate, and well above freezing. Colder weather was forecast for tonight and Saturday, however.

The rainy season ended a drought that had prevailed for nearly two months, with the exception of brief showers at frequent intervals. Moisture in the ground now is abundant and conditions have been brought about favorable for putting in of fall and winter crops.
