BUT THEY WERE NEVER USED. CHRIST HAD RISEN. IT WAS THEIR INTENTION THAT COUNTED. And they returned and prepared spaces and ointments—Luke 23:36.

Holly Ridge Stew

Refusal of three hundred union carpenters to work for fabulous wages offered them at Holly Ridge and their return to a camp project in Florida might not be the difference between life and death of this Federal defense project that is being so feverishly pressed in a race against time.

The departing carpenters demanded time and a half for ordinary overtime and double time for Sunday and holiday work. And we'll bet that every conceivable holiday on the calendar was rung into the reckoning.

Rumor and gossip have it that there are many workmen at Holly Ridge—and presumably the same is true of Fort Bragg and other army posts—passing off as carpenters who never worked enough at the trade to rate any sort of wages in civil construction work.

Men talk of their patriotism and their anxiety to defend the country, yet never lose an opportunity to rape the government in prices and wages. That is a sorry brand of loyalty, but it is nothing new to the good old U. S. A. It was that way in World War I and is that way again now.

Purpose of Schools

Although one proposal for adding a ninth month to the public school term has been junked, another has been dumped into the legislative hopper, but with what prospect of passage is as much a matter of uncertainty as ever.

Estimates are that the twelfth grade will cost $250,000 the first year and $750,000 the second. Why the half million dollar difference in the space of a single session is not explained for the layman to understand.

Latest scientific dope is that Mars cannot possibly sustain life. Meanwhile, Mars, no doubt, taking another gander at our planet, has come to the conclusion that the earth cannot possibly be occupied by humans.

Another thing we don't believe is that Mussolini has joined a Greek letter fraternity. The difference between death and taxes, it that Congress can't pass a law making death worse.

proposition would give them higher salaries.

But the question might be asked as to whether, after all, the schools are operated for the benefit of the teachers or for the children whom the public wants educated? Most of the talk in legislative halls and from the agitators has placed emphasis on teacher benefits and little or none on advantages to the children, as if training of youth were merely the basis for taking care of instructors.

Addition of a ninth grade certainly would provide more pay for the teachers. And it would at the same time assure greater thoroughness in child training. Why the teachers would not be willing to accept their salary increases in that form has not been any too fully elucidated.

We have said before and say again that the teachers are entitled to all the State can afford to pay them. There is a responsible task—that of training children—and they are deserving of compensation as nearly as possible in keeping with the ability of the people to provide. But we do submit that the children for whom the schools exist are due some consideration also. That, in reality, is the prime purpose of the schools.

Pay the teachers more; yes, by all means, if the money can be afforded. But let's share our generosity with the youth at the same time. They are also deserving of something better if we are in position to give it to them.

Mr. Willkie Testifies

Mr. Willkie's testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the lend-lease bill added very little that was new to what already was pretty generally known. The sum and substance of his views was that Britain was fighting an enemy that the United States considers an enemy, that she cannot do it for much longer unless she gets all-out aid from us, and that our best interests lie in furnishing it as speedily as possible.

Emphasis was added to his testimony by reason of his role, past and present, in American politics. He was the leader of the government opposition in last fall's political campaign and fought to the last ditch to win the presidency, and came fairly close to achieving the goal. Yet he now puts statesmanship and patriotism above party fealty and takes his stand with that same administration in its efforts to ward off impending danger to the country. It is not every hedgebound politician who would do that, and in his stand he has set the rest of the country an example.

Mr. Willkie wanted restrictions and limitations in the bill, and it appears that at least some will be incorporated in its provisions ere it becomes the law of the land. He said before he flew to England that he favored curbing powers granted the president in the measure, and he still holds out for that safeguard—and wisely so.

As we see it and as we have said before, the principle of the lend-lease proposal is acceptable to most Americans. Objections that have been raised have been concerned with the powers conferred upon a single individual. Nearly all citizens are for helping Britain to the fullest extent we are capable, commensurate with our own safety and interests. But those same citizens would like to see democracy preserved in this country, and fear that it will not be if total authority is conferred upon the President through abdication by Congress of its own prerogatives.

Wendell Willkie may yet play a large part in the defense program. Certainly he is a man of as great capacity as some others who are contributing their time and talent to the common cause, and while he is not hinting for some spotlight position, would offer such assistance to the government as might be asked of him.

His testimony before the Senate committee gave the bill a considerable boost, though admittedly it was in no particular jeopardy, for its enactment in substantially its original form, with some safeguards, was assured from the time it was demanded by the White House.

Another thing we don't believe is that Mussolini has joined a Greek letter fraternity. The difference between death and taxes, it that Congress can't pass a law making death worse.

He resigned in 1846, after refusing to accept definite instructions from the North Carolina legislature. He resigned the practice of law in Raleigh and died there in 1852.

3. Five. The first was at New Bern in August 1774, the second at New Bern in April 1775, the third at Hillsboro in August and September 1775, the fourth at Halifax in April and May 1776, and the fifth at Halifax in November and December 1776.

4. The legislature of 1907 passed an act which provided that the North Carolina flag be "displayed either on a staff upon the top of draped behind the judges' stand in each and every court house in the State, and that the flag shall be displayed at each and every term of court held."

ly dominated by him. (5) Lack of even one "may" vote on Congressional redistricting.

(6) Withholding of earnestly desired amendments to the retirement bill.

There are other instances of similar nature, but half a dozen should be enough to get across what is meant.

The normal course of events on practically every major piece of legislation so far has been (1) introduction by an administration man, (2) talk of flaming insurgency against the proposal, (3) outbreak of this rebellious spirit in committee to the point of refusing to be hurried into action on the bill, and (4) an instance of the finance committee's voice vote actually rejecting the food exemptions, (4) a period for cooling off during which leaders soothe ruffled feathers and perhaps sing siren songs to the malcontents, and (5) collapse of the opposition and swallowing of the administration's medicine without further ado or protest.

Beneath the surface there is apparent an undercurrent of dissatisfaction with the bill, and in the instance of the finance committee a voice vote actually rejecting the food exemptions, (4) a period for cooling off during which leaders soothe ruffled feathers and perhaps sing siren songs to the malcontents, and (5) collapse of the opposition and swallowing of the administration's medicine without further ado or protest.

There remain, of course, several ticklish matters which have not yet been brought to a showdown and it could be thought there are no signs of one now—so far of things as they have been so far.

message to the legislators urging them to follow the majority report of a special commission on wage and hour legislation and strengthen the present labor law by amending it to strike out many exemptions now granted.

Both divisions got Broughton-sponsored bills to reorganize the Department of Conservation and Development and make the board a 15-member body with the terms running concurrent with the governor.

Senator Stacy of Robeson offered a bill to provide a ninth increment for teachers, which is the same thing as proposing a $5 a month raise for teachers with "A" certificates who have nine years of experience. Now increments may be earned for eight years.

In committee meetings it was announced that the plan to shuffle judicial districts and add two more had been abandoned and a bill to

Representative Fish, Republican, New York, charged at a Baltimore party rally that Willkie "is now leading the war drums more furiously than the interventionists and war makers of the Democratic party."

Strike Call Stops Mills

Company, a subsidiary of Youngstown Sheet and Tube at the Bear Hill plant, also was closed as the result of a strike called yesterday.

About 1,000 men were idle because of the dispute.

Meanwhile, a way to avert a strike on the Rutland Railroad in Vermont was sought by the national mediation board in Washington, following an urgent appeal by William H. Wills, Vermont governor.

The line is a link between Montreal and Boston, and Wills termed the prospective strike "important nationally and internationally at this time."

Fifteen railroad brotherhoods representing 1,300 employees voted to strike at 6 p. m. tomorrow "to resist a wage reduction of from ten to thirty percent," railway labor officials said.

Negotiations in the strike of CIO employees of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Company at Milwaukee were renewed today in Washington after union and company delegations held separate discussions last night. The strike, now in its 23rd day, is holding up production on $45,000,000 in defense orders.

Had been received regarding the situation in the Pacific.

There were reports from well informed Balkan quarters that Turkish diplomatic circles had instituted a campaign for a unified Balkan defense front made up of Bulgaria, Greece, Yugoslavia and Turkey, but the campaign admittedly was begun with little hope of success.

In Albania, Greek troops were reported to have advanced about three miles toward Valona in the coastal sector.

The Italian forces, the Greeks reported, were digging heavy defenses after calling off a series of costly counter attacks which were said to have been broken up by the Greeks.

Republicans Differ On British Aid

quents were being held in every state and the District of Columbia.

Most of the speechmakers conceded the advisability of American aid abroad, but some took sharp exception to terms of the pending lend-lease bill.

Senator Nye, Republican, North Dakota, told a Philadelphia audience that Willkie's support of the legislation represented a "betrayal" and declared that "Mr. Willkie has not destroyed the two party system in this country he has at least contributed largely to its destruction."

Senator Taft, Republican, Ohio, speaking at Harrisonburg, Va., asserted that Willkie "does not and cannot speak for the Republican party."

But support for the legislation came from Thomas E. Dewey, New York district attorney, who, like Taft, was an unsuccessful contender for the Republican presidential nomination.

Dewey told a Washington, D. C. audience that he favored the lease-
