WHISTLES FORGET.

I am lonely for a bell
In a gray stone steeple
Telling the hour
To quiet people;

Solemn with echo,
Gentle with feeling,
Shadow-muffled
At twilight's stealing.

Whistles forget,
For all they are agile,
Time is a wind-flower,
Time is fragile.

The hour goes softly,
A flame on a candle—
A message only
A bell can handle.

Carolina Bird-Lore

The Wild Turkey

The noblest game bird found in North America is the wild turkey, which I am glad to say is still available to the hunter in many sections of North Carolina. It is now, as of course, a common bird as a gang of turkeys requires a large body of woodland to enable the birds to find a sufficiency of food and to feel a comparative degree of safety. The species is probably the shyest and most alert of our wild game. If a deer sights a man standing perfectly still, it may lope on by him only a few feet away provided, of course, it does not catch the man's scent. The wild turkey, however, seeing a man as did the deer, leaves the place at a high rate of speed, always endeavoring to keep some distance between it and the possible enemy.

The eastern section of the State is the area in which most of our wild turkeys are now found though I see no reason why the wild turkey should not in former days have been as plentiful on the wooded slopes of our mountains as in the lowlands of the east, that is in localities where beech, oak, chestnut, and other suitable woodland fruits and nuts were available foods. At the present time according to a recent publication of the State Department of Conservation 14 of our 25 mountain counties are listed as still having some wild turkeys as follows: Alleghany, Ashe, Avery, Cherokee, Clay, Graham, Haywood, Jackson, Macon, Swain, Transylvania, Wilkes, Yadkin, and Yancey. Of the piedmont counties, 22 of the 32 are listed as turkey hunting areas, and 39 of the 43 eastern counties. It may be news to some of you, but the wild turkey is still to be found in Wake County, one of our most thickly populated counties, though I am not telling what part of Wake. I have no doubt that the Department of Conservation would look with favor on the matter of re-stocking counties making requests to that end if suitable conditions prevail.

Description: Very similar to the bronze variety of the domesticated bird. The tips of the tail feathers, and of the feathers on the rump, are chestnut-colored, while in the domestic turkey they are white. (Contributed by N. C. Bird Club).

living at Lilydale, but fine portraits painted by spirits there, under the guidance of the Spiritualists. The Bangs Sisters were well known for this type of work. Why not inquire? Mr. H— had been strongly skeptical of the Spiritualist movement but he was much interested in the painting. He went to Lilydale, and to the Bangs Sisters, and asked for a painting. He specified, however, that he would answer no questions as to the person who was to be subject for the painting.

"We only need to know one thing," said Mr. H— "is the person living or dead?" Mr. H— answered that the person was living. He was then asked to pick out a canvas of the size he wished the portrait to be. He did so. Another canvas of the same size was picked out and the two canvases were placed face to face. Nothing happened. They waited a long while.

"Do you know where this person is at any time of the day?" Mr. H— was asked. He made a mental note and he was always collected the canvas at eight in the morning.

"Yes," he answered, "between eight and eight thirty I know where the person will be."

"Very well then, return here a half time tomorrow," he was told. He did so, but this time he picked a smaller canvas so as to avoid having his last evening's canvas put off upon him. The two canvases were faced together. Suddenly Mr. H—'s canvas began to darken. The background was apparently being painted in. As suddenly it was clear again.

It then darkened again, cleared, and darkened a third time. This time the remainder of the picture filled in and in 45 minutes he had an astonishingly beautiful picture of his wife—who was still in Buffalo, New York. He took the picture home, and the woman who told me about it has seen the picture. A peculiar characteristic about it is that the color seems to come and go, much as the color comes and goes in the face of a living person.

Granville wilt was first observed on tobacco in North Carolina in the vicinity of Creedmore about 1900, says H. R. Garriss, extension plant pathologist of N. C. State College.

Marian Martin Pattern

PATTERN 9673

This engaging young frock has all the convenience of a one-piece dress, but that new lower waist-line gives a smart two-piece effect! It's a Marian Martin style Pattern 9673 and as simple, vivacious and wearable as can be. A buttoning goes clear down the front for jaunty style as well as usefulness. The skirt has panels down the front and back to give slender lines below the hip-seaming, and long darts above the seams give smooth, trim, through-the-middle fit. Don't you love the gay scalloped collar—why not make it in crisp contrast? There are three sleeve versions—long, three-quarter or short—and you may use a belt. The small view shows how a contrasting skirt adds to the two-piece effect of this frock.

Pattern 9673 may be ordered only in misses' sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 16 requires 3 3/8 yards 39 inch fabric.
Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins for this MARIAN MARTIN pattern. Be sure to write plainly your SIZE, NAME, ADDRESS, and DISPLAY NUMBER.
Send your order to Daily Dispatch, Pattern Department, 232 W. 18th St., New York, N. Y.

Closs's Column

"The Widow Duck" was the name of our favorite childhood game. The five members of "Our gang" each owned a celluloid fish, and in addition to the fish, the leader owned a celluloid duck. For some reason it was called "The Widow Duck". As we played together in the swamps we built houses for our fish, played out our plots as games and wars. But no matter how hard we played, no one ever won a game from "The Widow Duck". The four men-fish-owners were constantly baffled because they could never win. After a few months we realized that one reason we never won was that the Widow Duck always made all the rules. If we got the Widow Duck cornered, she would make a new rule on the spot that allowed her to escape. If we tried to use the same rule later on, "The Widow Duck" had changed it again. The strange part of it to me today, is that we didn't realize why we lost until we were too late to change the game.

It seems obvious that Germany played "the widow duck" with the remaining free countries. American firms who thought they could do business with the nazis (up to last year) found that they had to ship goods on German ships, in one word, with German insurance companies, and pay German inspectors to roam all the way to America to inspect the goods—and most important of all each contract had a clause that read something like this: "This contract is made under National Socialist Principles", which, being interpreted as the business year progressed, meant, "I make and change my own rules as I go along."

Have you read page 75 in the March Reader's Digest?

Ghost Story: Mr. H—, a resident of Buffalo, N. Y., had a well known artist to paint a portrait of his wife. The portrait was a surprise to her, and she hung it in the library. Mrs. H— was delighted with it and Mr. H— constantly referred to his pleasure at having such a good picture.

It became necessary for Mr. H— to go on a business trip to Chattanooga, and on this trip he mentioned his wife's portrait. He was asked if he had seen any of the portraits painted at Lilydale.

He was answered, "I did not know there was any well known artist living at Lilydale." His income, nastened to explain that there wasn't— or rather there was none.
