Closs's Column

GRANNYMA WAS EIGHTY-FIVE but Grannyma got around. Whenever or wherever something was going on, there was also Grannyma. Take the day of the parade, for instance. Grannyma took off by herself to see the parade. She was a little woman, however, and try as she might, she could not get near enough to see what was going on. Suddenly a distinguished looking man came up to her and said, "Wouldn't you like to see the parade from the State house? You'd have a much better view from there."

"Why yes," said Grannyma. I'd like it very much."

So the distinguished looking man took Grannyma under his wing and began to push his way through the crowd. "Make way for the lady!" he would cry, as though she were some one of great importance. Each time the crowd would part like the Red Sea and Grannyma would pass by. Up into the State house they went. Once inside, the man commanded that Grannyma be given a chair in the window where there was the best possible view. The man stood behind her chair to see that no one tried to make her move. It was a wonderful occasion for her and afterward she thanked him and went home to tell the family about it.

"What a nice man!" said his laughter. "Someone of importance of course, I wonder who?"

"He was a gate crusher," said Grannyma happily. "He was using me as a racket to get a good view of himself. But I certainly did have a wonderful time."

THREE STORIES FROM PUERTO RICO:

During Spanish days entry boxes were built along the coast at intervals and the guards were changed each night. One night a sentry disappeared. A search was made, but no trace of him could be found. The next night the new sentry also disappeared. Another, more thorough search was made. Neither man was ever seen again. Many theories were advanced, and the accredited one was fantastic. There had been an abnormally high tide on both nights.

Distinguished Centennial Guest

One of the honored guests at the Henderson Centennial celebration July 1, 2 and 3, was Mrs. J. C. Farmer, of Birmingham, Ala., a granddaughter of Chief Justice Leonard Henderson of the North Carolina Supreme Court, for whom the city of Henderson was named when it was chartered as a town by the State legislature in 1841. The Centennial commemorated that event and also the sixtieth anniversary of the formation of Vance county by the legislature of 1861.

It was decided that the high tides had brought a huge octopus to shore, and that each sentry in turn had been carried away by the octopus.

Like a dream . . . of a beautiful picture . . . the sailing vessel was coming into harbor. It was loaded with coal. On shore many people gathered to watch it. The sky was clear, the water calm, and the colors vivid. Suddenly a dark shadow turned to horror. The vessel was headed straight for the coral reefs. Before their eyes it hit the huge coral rocks and went down, all hands lost. There was no radio then that might have saved it. It was no dream. It happened in San Juan in 1906.

The last story concerns an ancestress of one of the most important families in Puerto Rico. She was in love with a young man of whom her family disapproved. When she refused to change her mind . . . or her heart . . . she was sent to a convent. Her sweetheart returned from a voyage to find that she would soon take her last vows. He attended Mass and the girl recognized his voice. That night she fashioned a rope and slid down it in order to free him. Unlike the story-book heroine, she fell, breaking her leg. The young man carried her to his uncle, who was a doctor, and soon they were safe aboard a vessel. He took her to see with him until such time as their marriage was recognized by the girl's parents. The tower from which the girl slid down can still be seen.

Shang'ed Banner." Jasper Hicks was the principal narrator, assisted by Russell L. Rowland, pageant director, and Mrs. Rowland, and E. H. Hicks took the role of Father Time.

The pageant depicted the early settlement of the Henderson section, as well as the important place to face and other crops occupy in the economic life of the community. Very much was said, too, of the naming of Henderson for Chief Justice Leonard Henderson, of the State Supreme Court, at the suggestion of Lewis Heaver, who gave the ground on which the railroad station was located when the old Raleigh & Gaston line reached here in 1838.

Universal comment was that the pageant was colorful, true to history, and presented in a manner highly efficient and most acceptable.

About 4,000 persons visited the Seaward Railway's display at its modern diesel-electric locomotive, its stainless steel coach with reclining chairs, and the advanced Pullman car, all air conditioned and the last word in travel comfort. Also on display was one of the modern freight cars now in use on the Seaward.

The program today included an address by Associate Justice W. A. Dean, of the State Supreme Court, on "The Supreme Court and Its History," with five in all of the seven members of the court in attendance, some with their wives. After the parade this afternoon, visiting bands and the Henderson high school band gave a concert on the high school grounds. The bands were entertained at luncheon at the Hilton service station a mile out on the Raleigh road.

After the pageant tonight, the Centennial ball will be given at the National Guard Armory on the Dabney road.

An art show will be given at the Henderson airport, near Gillburg, four miles east of the city, tomorrow afternoon, with stunt flying, para-white jumps and the like. Final presentation of the pageant tomorrow evening will end the Centennial.

Time Limit In Strike

holding recognition until the IRR order has been appealed to the courts. An independent union representing other workers has waived its claim. President Roosevelt turned back to the center the North American Aviation Company plant at Inglewood, Cal., and the last remaining detachment of 1,500 soldiers was released from further duty after final settlement of the CIO-called strike there. The soldiers took over the plant June 26 and broke a five-day strike.

In a strike which union leaders feared a national test on the use of WPA labor at such union wages, the AFL Building Trades Council at St. Louis instructed between 1,500 and 2,000 men today to stay away from their jobs on a $4,000,000 construction job at Jefferson Barracks.
