Henderson Girls Lose As Firemen Defeat Raleigh

Doubleheader here Saturday night sees girls licked, 5-2, by Raleigh; Henderson rallies to win, 8-7 in ten-innings.

Henderson girls dominated Henderson Saturday night by winning the second game of a three game series, 5 to 2, after taking the first inning of the series earlier in the evening, 3 to 0 score.

The first game of the doubleheader at the district fair playoff for the title of the St. C. softball series Henderson Firemen came from behind to defeat Raleigh, 3 to 7.

The girls started with a nip and tuck affair from the first Raleigh led in the first inning, but Henderson matched it when Maxine Baker hit for the event inside the park.

Raleigh went ahead in the sixth when they then scored three more runs in the seventh when Annie Jones, Maxine Baker and Maxine Baker hit for the winning runs in the seventh.

Farm Products To Encounter Slower Sales

College Station, Raleigh, Aug. 25.—The spirited demand for North Carolina farm products will slow down to a trot during the remaining months of the year, it was predicted today by Dean J. O. Schaub, director of the N. C. St. C. College Extension Service.

Economists of the U. S. Department of Agriculture look for a continued rise in the demand for farm products during the remainder of the year, but at a slower rate than in the past several months, Dean Schaub said.

The production was affected on the basis of an industrial trend to decrease labor and material costs.

But though consumers are expected to have a large buying power the food and clothing during the rest of the year, competent managers are agreed that there will also be a large expansion of the defense program, largely in the expense of civilian goods.

Curbs On Installment Credit Ordered Into Effect Sept. 1

Bigger installments and time limit put to hit many items.

Washington, Aug. 22 (AP)—The Federal Reserve Board today ordered curbs on installment credit to be put into effect Sept. 1, on a wide range of consumer goods.

The regulations, which are effective Sept. 1, will be illegal for anyone to give credit without a down payment or to permit the payment of the balance to extend over more than 18 months.

The restrictions follow the one-third minimum down payment and maximum of 18 months to pay balance—new and used automobiles, airplanes, power-driven boats, outboard motors and motorcycles.

Twenty per cent minimum down payment and 18 months to pay balance—new and used refrigerators, electric ranges, household washing machines, stoves, vacuum cleaners, cooking stoves and ranges, heating stoves, and space heaters, electric dishwashers, room-air conditioners, sewing machines, radios, phonographs and musical instruments composed primarily of metal.

Five per cent minimum down payment and 18 months to pay—household furnaces and heating units for furnace (including installations for oil, gas or coal stokers, household water heaters, waterpumps, plumbing and sanitary fixtures, home air conditioning systems, and attic ventilating fans).

Ten per cent minimum down payment and 18 months to pay—new household furniture (including dressers, bed springs and mattresses) but excluding floor coverings, draperies and bed coverings, pianos and household electric organs.

No down payment but maximum of 18 months to pay—materials and services (except for items listed above) used in making repairs or improvements on existing real estate when amount is less than $1,000, same restriction on cash loans of less than $1,000.

Rules for enforcement of these restrictions were contained in a 23-page set of regulations, some of which will not become effective until later. For instance, renewals of and additions to present installment credit will not be affected by the rules until Nov. 1. Another rule requiring a minimum monthly payment of $5 on installment credit.

SOME EXCEPTIONS MADE

Today's curbs on installment credit apply to a wide range of consumer goods, but there are some exceptions. For instance, the restriction on small cash loans does not apply to students. Likewise, curbs will be applied in connection with the Civil and War Relocation Authority program.

WELDON MAN HELD ON MURDER CHARGE

Weldon, Aug. 26—James Stokes, 30, died in a hospital Monday and W. J. Jowers, 33, a cripple, was charged with murder as a result of a fight in an automobile near Saturday night, police reported.

According to police the fatal blow was struck in a car which was stopped by the police. Charles Stokes and Dorothy Louise Carter at the time of his arrest police said he had been cutting the woman across the throat, according to police reports.

Jowers was being held in Halifax county jail without parole, it was said.

Miss Stokes is survived by her mother, a sister and two nephews. No funeral arrangements have been made.

Lesser schools, the highway builders, the state law and order departments were present in person and by proxy and in a sort of informal hall for all discussion and action.

The suggestions made by the institutional representatives, Saturday are regarded by other state officials as reasonable and modest, although in total amount the figures run to $20 million.

Weldon textile production in Argentina this year is expected to reach record levels.

Castle of Contentment

BY LORENA CARLETON

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE

WHEN YLENA found Scott Hamilton asleep on a divan in the lobby of her New York hotel, she poked him in the chest. He awoke spluttering questions.

"Where am I?" is the appropriate question, "I believe," the girl told him, "Now I'll ask one. She sank beside him. "What are you doing here?"

Smiles crinkled around his sleepy eyes. "Can't a guy just suddenly decide to travel?"

"Not in the middle of the winter season at the ranch."

"Brooks can take care of things for me just like Father can take care of your business. Just like you, Ylena," he chuckled, "I'm here for the glamor."

The girl grunted in a mocking fashion. "Now let's have the real reason."

Scott yawned and sat up straight. "When Aunt Daisy called and told me you'd gone to New York again, I couldn't help remembering how the last trip turned out. Things go wrong. I got worried about you. So I got on the next plane. Sheepishly he looked down into her face. "And here I am."

Ylena cut in to tell him about Carlyle, about Mrs. Vincent's not unkind reception, about the rumormongering that now was a definite thing. For many minutes she talked, realizing that her friend's happiness over her good fortune equaled her own.

"Have you heard from Tate?" he suddenly asked.

"Yes," the girl said, not looking at Scott. "A wire. The uncomfortable, apologetic feeling she always had regarding her fiancé in Scott's presence rushed over her. "Let's not talk about Tate," she said sharply. Scott's inquiry brought Tate's impertinent message to her mind. It renewed the anger she had felt toward him since his rude, threatening response, when she told him of the necessity of her New York trip.

Scott broke the uneasy silence. "At any rate, I'm glad to find you all right."

"Of course I'm all right. Why shouldn't I be all right?" Instantly her manner softened and she reached for the man's hand. "I'm sorry, Scott, to be so snippy. I guess I'm tired and haven't sense enough to know it. Heaven knows, I don't deserve your kindness."

"Tush!" Hamilton responded. "When are you going home?"

"Whenever the boat sails—I'm going through the Canal."

"I think I might like a little boat trip, and Lord knows it would be good for you to have a rest like that."

Ylena gave a high-shouldered shrug. "Suit yourself." Slyly she added, "Rose is going along."

"That was?" Scott ducked like a prize fighter. "All the same, I still think I'll take a stab at it." His hand idly tapping the davenport cushion, encountered a calling card. "Cosmo Peyton Harrison, Jr.," he read. "Whew! All that on top of a Park avenue address. Here."

"All these presents?" Rose said in a voice that tried to scold, but instead, sounded as thrilled as a high school girl accepting her first date. "You'd think we were bound on a regular ocean voyage on a liner." She gave the little ship, waiting at dock, a critical glance. "Instead of this canoe."

Her employer said, "But you're going on a much longer trip." He put his arm about her.

Ylena and Scott shook hands with Vernon Stone, then tactfully turned away from the tender, rather pathetic farewell between him and his housekeeper.

Ylena said, "It is a small boat, isn't it?"

"It somehow gets bigger after you sail," he told her. "Only it never gets big enough that you can hide from the people you don't want to see."

"In case you get the urge, you won't have to hide from me. I'll be hiding myself. I'm going to bed and not get up until Havana." They went up the gangplank together, stood at the rail for a while watching the activity about them, then left merrily and went to their respective staterooms.

In less than ten minutes Scott was rapping on the girl's door with frenzied delight. "Guess what?" The skipper is 'Runt' Maxwell. Haven't seen him since we went to Military Institute in Virginia."

"Captain Pierce Elliot Maxwell," Ylena recited. "Yes, I guess that could work into 'Runt' Maxwell, if you kicked it around a little." She eased the door shut as she said, "That's nice, Scott. You'll have someone to play with. Good night, Scott."

Evidently she meant her vows about resting. Except for meals and short, deep-breathing jaunts about the deck, Hamilton scarcely ever saw her.

Two days later he told her, "I didn't mean for you to hibernate like an old grizzly bear, when I said you needed a rest," he objected.

"I'm through sleeping." It was their last night out before Cuba, and they were sailing in warm breezes. "I'm all ready for Havana."

"How ready?" Scott demanded. "Ready enough to get up when we sight Morro, if I wake you?" She promised. Scott said, "Then it's a date. Right in this exact spot." He tapped the deck with his gum-soled shoe. "And high time. You've certainly neglected me. If I hadn't had Runt for company, I'd have been plenty lonesome. A guy can't even depend too much on him. He's always busy dusting his shiny uniform buttons or sailing the ship or something."

"I thought perhaps you were on the bridge last night. For a time it was anything but smooth sailing."

"Just like true love," Hamilton murmured.

The girl leaned on the rail, her hands extended over the billowing water. Scott lit a pair of cigarettes. In the sheltered flame of his lighter, he glimpsed the diamond ring on her finger.

"Why don't you take that off?" he demanded.

She gave him a peculiar, straight gaze, then said in a tippyness that failed to match her expression, "Maybe I'll lose it. Then I can collect the insurance."
