Calcutt's Parole

On paper Governor Broughton has made out substantial support for the parole of Joe Calcutt, Fayetteville slot machine company operator. There is, too, the natural inclination of a sympathetic public to reach out in tenderness to most men caught in the meshes of the law.

Undoubtedly, as the governor observes, Calcutt has learned that the law is supreme. But he didn't learn it until he had exhausted every device of the law in an endeavor to dodge that supremacy.

The fact that Calcutt has disposed of his slot machine interests, both as to operation and manufacture, is in his favor, even though that "disposal" implies that they have passed into other hands for use in the same illegal channels in which they were applied by him.

Moreover, this business of the President demanding five to seven billion dollars more to spend in the places every time he comes home from a sea trip is getting to be rather monotonous, to say nothing of burdensome for the country.

The last definite figures we recall, having seen on the matter was that something like fifty billion dollars had been authorized and appropriated to be used largely at the will and discretion of the President personally.

Billions are talked about and looked upon in Washington these days with hardly more respect or fear than millions used to be. The United States already has become the most extravagant and most spendthrift people that ever inhabited the earth.

The Nazis, we read, are having a tough time controlling the Norwegians. They should have known better than try to subdue a nation of ski-jumpers.

More Billions

To the lowly layman, of whom there are so many, it is somewhat of a mystery as to why the President talks of another—we said another—seven billion dollars defense appropriation when he has made money now on hand or authorized that he can count on even conceive of in its enormity.

The way money is being handed over to foreign countries these days, the question is pertinent in inquiring how on earth they all managed to fight the war or even exist, before Uncle Sam opened his treasury doors wide and invited all and sundry to come and help themselves, its free and easy and without obligation to repay.

Britain and all the rest of them are leaving no stone unturned in attempting to create the impression in this country that they are on the verge of collapse, financially, militarily and morally, unless we come to their rescue in a big way and stand close by their side.

Right now one hears no little about aid to Russia. Well, Russia fought in the war with Germany long before she was attacked by Germany and before she got on our side and all that time not a help from us or from any one else.

If Hitler had anybody he could fight by coming over to our side, we suppose Washington would immediately establish a lend-lease drawing account for him, in spite of the fact that he had been doing very well up to that time.

It appears that the policy of bleeding Uncle Sam is rapidly becoming a popular international racket and pastime. Who knows but that Hitler himself will eventually do an about face in order to take in his share of the loot that is so plentiful and so abundant in this promised land that flows with milk and honey in an unending stream.

We are perfectly willing and anxious that this country do its one hundred percent part in beating Hitler and winning this war, but quite frankly we can find little relief in the idea of every one collapsing into an arms for successor and successor the minute they find they can juggle us into accepting them.

We can't see how Britain and Russia have exhausted their resources and reserves much more than has Hitler. Certainly both of them have done less fighting.

Moreover, this business of the President demanding five to seven billion dollars more to spend in the places every time he comes home from a sea trip is getting to be rather monotonous, to say nothing of burdensome for the country.

Billions are talked about and looked upon in Washington these days with hardly more respect or fear than millions used to be.

More billions! Yes, and for what? Mostly habit, it appears.

The Truth Is Out

From the lips of the president of the Association of American Railroads the Senate committee investigating the alleged gasoline shortage in eastern and southern states has been told flatly that there are twenty thousand surplus railway tank cars available for transportation of gasoline and fuel oil.

Pelley expressed surprise at testimony last week by Ralph Davies, acting petroleum coordinator, that he had "continually invited" the railroads to supply this sort of definite information.

All of which adds up to just what? Well, for one thing, it furnishes basis for belief that a lot of the so-called shortage was purposely trumped up for some reason or other. To wit: it would indicate that man believes the job he is supposed to be doing in this gasoline situation.

The Senate investigation may, after all, turn up something to advantage of those who are frightened over the gasoline crisis. It may even demonstrate there is no emergency, actually, beyond what may have been manipulated.

birthday, 54; John Wallace Winborne, born July 12, 1884, age 57; Aaron Avery Fincher Seawell, born October 30, 1884, age next birthday, 57.

North Carolina's deed giving the western part of the State to the Federal government was signed February 25, 1790.

A total of 636 enlisted men and 26 officers were killed in actual fighting and 211 enlisted men and seven officers died from wounds received in actual fighting.

The constitution of 1776, which was not amended or changed until 1835, did not require any real estate ownership as a qualification to vote for a representative to the state legislature, however, it required the payment of taxes.

A person must have attained the age of thirty years before he is eligible as governor in North Carolina. This requirement was written in the constitution adopted by the reconstruction convention in 1868, and has not been changed.

SEPTEMBER MORN

DEFENSE BOND Quiz

Q To conduct the Treasury's country-wide Defense Savings Program would seem to require a large organization. Is this the case?

A No. Promotion of the Defense Savings program is largely a matter of volunteer effort. State chairmen are organizing general committees, which in turn carry on the Defense Savings activity through other committees appointed in counties, cities, and towns.

Q When will Defense Stamps go on sale in retail stores?

A Many stores already have placed stamps on sale, and it is estimated that by the middle of September stamps will be available in a million stores.

Note—Buy Defense Bonds and Stamps go to the nearest postoffice, bank, or savings and loan association, or write to the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, D. C.
