Driving for a Mark

Henderson's fast-moving tobacco market may yet surprise those who have been lulled by conservative estimates of the season's sales totals.

Though heavy the market was made by the cotton and a half million pounds and sales volume would have to be a very satisfactory one.

While the tale has not been told in its entirety, we are near enough to the end for it to be said with certainty that this has been a very satisfactory season for farmers, warehousemen, tobacco men in general and the business community that depends on heavily on fortunes of this great money crop.

Market trends have been a boon to growers and to this entire section. High averages have lightened the load for all of us, and every indication now is that the Henderson market in the next several weeks will conclude one of its best auction years.

Natural Sequence

Before any of the recent liquor store closings were held in this section and further east, this newspaper made the observation that results of these referenda would serve to some extent as a cue for other counties, both wet and dry, as to whether to attempt to banish legal liquor if they had it, or to admit it if they did not.

While the dries gained in Vance particularly but also in Warren, both counties remained wet. Franklin by a few hundred votes reversed its policy and decided to abolish legal liquor. Bertie had never voted before, but it went wet on a county-wide basis, whereas heretofore the county seat alone was allowed its stores by act of the legislature. The dries found comfort in gains they made, though victory was denied them except in one instance.

Whether these three will be the next to ballot is not certain as yet. It is more certain, however, that if they do, and go wet in the process, there will be a flood of elections to follow not only in counties that have previously refused to license whisky but in others that have never made the test.

Efforts now being talked whereby prohibition forces would attempt to elect a 1943 legislature favorable to a statewide referendum would bring spotty results. Recent elections and conditions generally do not hold bright prospects for achievement of such desired goals.

Would Draft Hoey

Those North Carolina politicians in Washington who would draft Governor Hoey for a second term at the end of Governor Broughton's tenure three years hence would face an uphill task. Not that the former chief executive has lost his popularity or that he would not be a perfect fit in the office, again as before, but that politics just doesn't work that way in this State.

Not since the days of Zeb Vance have the people of this commonwealth turned to any man for a second term in the governor's mansion. There are always too many aspirants for the place to permit the State to rely on the ability and fitness of one of its public servants in that manner. That is the prospective predicament for 1944. Four or five ambitious gentlemen already are being mentioned for the next gubernatorial contest. That of itself could be an impressive argument for drafting the former governor, though numbers prevailed in unprecedented quantity only a short eighteen months ago and there was no drafting or talk of drafting a compromise candidate.

Strange things do happen in the political world and could happen in this instance. But there has been more talk of Hoey running against Senator Reynolds than for another tenure in the State Capital. Given his choice, though, we would not be surprised if the distinguished Shelby gentleman would prefer returning to Raleigh rather than going into the upper house of Congress.

For our part, there could be no obstacle whatever to Hoey gubernatorial ambition three years hence. It would be our guess that he would consent to serve if he thought the people wanted him again, but we doubt if he would be willing to defy a field of three or four or five seekers after the job, all of them younger than he and none of whom has yet held the office.

Litvinoff Returns

Critical times have conspired in Russia to restore to power and great influence Maxim Litvinoff, the one-time eighth-hand man of Josef Stalin, who is coming to Washington as Soviet ambassador. Why Constantine Oumansky, who long held that office but was lately recalled to Moscow, is being replaced, is one of those mysteries of Kremlin policy, as was the temporary obliteration of Litvinoff himself a few years back.

Litvinoff, then foreign commissioner, an office corresponding to our secretary of state, came to the United States in 1933 when President Roosevelt began breaking precedents by resuming diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia, a status that had never been accorded that nation since the communists came into power in 1917 and at once quit the war. The President acted by way of seeking new outlets for American manufactures to the end that our foreign trade might be stepped up as a move toward beating the depression.

Litvinoff made a very favorable impression in this country at the time, considering the hostility that was general in this country toward the bolsheviks in those days and ever since until Russia became an ally of the democracies when attacked by Hitler last June. His conduct of foreign policy, in so far as he was allowed liberty of action under Stalin's autocratic rule, was of a high order of its kind, but which at best was anathema to American ideals of life and government.

Under conditions that now exist, Litvinoff will be welcome in this country, and as a diplomat conversant with American standards will stand head and shoulder above his predecessor or any other Russian who could be sent here. Without casting aspersions upon Oumansky, there is no violation of the graces by saying that the new ambassador will fit admirably into the present picture of world affairs and movements.

What Do You Know About North Carolina?

By FRED H. MAY

- 1. Who was the Virginia legislator who proposed in 1790 that Virginia and North Carolina set up a joint government?
2. What does it cost the State per year to keep a patient at the State Hospital at Morganton?
3. When did North Carolina have three changes of United States senators during one term of Congress?
4. What was the average salary of a North Carolina public school teacher in 1912?
5. When did William R. Davie, "Father of the University," leave North Carolina?
6. What was the Daily Dispatch over Senator Simmons for the democratic nomination for the U. S. Senate in 1937?

ANSWERS.

1. John Taylor, representative from Caroline county, Virginia, and United States senator. He served a number of terms in the Virginia assembly, and was a member when he proposed that North Carolina and Virginia withdraw from the recently formed United States and set up a confederation of the two states. Prior to that time, in 1792, he had served a short time in the United States senate to fill a vacancy, but resigned before the end of the term. He was appointed to fill another vacancy in 1803, and was elected to fill a vacancy in 1812. At the end of this term he sought the nomination to succeed himself and was elected, serving until his death in 1824.

2. According to the budget bureau report to the 1941 legislature the cost last year was $177 per patient. The total appropriation provided for the year for the institution was $414,605. The appropriation provided for this year was $450,374. The institution had asked for $530,084.

3. During the term of the Fifty-third Congress, which convened March 4, 1893, Senator Zeb Vance died April 14, 1894, and Governor Elias Carr appointed former Governor Thos. J. Jarvis to fill the vacancy. Senator Jarvis was seated April 19, five days after Senator Vance's death, and served until January 23, 1895, when the fusion republican legislature elected Jeter C. Prentiss to fill the vacancy. Senator Prentiss was seated the next day.

4. During the school year of 1912 the average salaries of rural school teachers amounted to $33.82, and for city schools, $41.15.

5. William Richardson Davie, former governor, state senator, and leader, left North Carolina in 1805, and settled on his Catawba river plantation, Trivoli, in Lancaster county, South Carolina. Former Governor Davie was born in England in 1756, and brought to America by his father at the age of seven years and left with his uncle, Rev. William Richardson, who lived in the Waxhaw section of South Carolina. After taking an active part in the Revolutionary War young Davie married a Northampton county girl, Miss Sarah Jones, and settled at Halifax to practice law. He lived there during the time of his activities in the affairs of the State. He represented Halifax county eight terms in the state senate, and was father of the bill that established the University, successfully passing it through the legislature of 1789. After moving to South Carolina he lived on his plantation until his death November 18, 1820; buried at Waxhaw church near Lancaster. A movement is on foot now to remove his remains to the University of North Carolina.

6. The Daily Dispatch was 70-367. The total vote for Senator F. M. Simmons was 129,875; for Bailey, 2,002,942.

House Vote on Neutrality Act Expected Next Week

The broader Senate measure, allowing armed ships to enter non-forbidden belligerent ports and combat areas, thus must be considered by the House. House debate was set to start Wednesday, and although the rules in that chamber would permit the leadership to limit debate to an hour, it was indicated that at least one or two full days discussion would be granted.

December 5 Set As Date For Strike

(Continued from Page One) fact-finding board are not binding upon either side—a strike may not be put into effect for 30 days after the President receives the board's report. While the railway strike threat loomed large, other labor disputes attracted wide attention. Henry Bennett, Ford Motor company personnel director, charged last night that officials of the CIO United Automobile Workers failed to discipline union members who, he said, caused illegal work stoppages. He also said 25 machines were sabotaged during a shutdown, caused by wage disputes, in two plants at River Rouge, near Detroit. The disputes threw 2,000 workers into idleness. A shutdown of a pressed steel ed more of those Ford workers, division and an assembly line affected the others. Wage demands and current rates of pay were not disclosed. Welders, in what their union leaders called an unauthorized strike, caused the pressed steel closing. The axle department dispute, and the walkout of only 250 workers there, nevertheless brought idleness to nearly 44,000. Union officials expressed the opinion that work would be resumed Monday.

New York, Nov. 8.—(AP)—Trend doctors were unable to agree on a diagnosis in today's stock market and leading issues were subjected to intermittent spells of rising temperatures and selling chills.

The list tumbled about unevenly at the start and narrowly irregular price changes prevailed at the close. Dealings picked up occasionally and transfers for the two hours ran to around 300,000 shares.
