Some Minor Lip Diseases If Neglected May End in Cancer

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D. WE ALL SEE our lips every day—at least I presume we all do. I have heard that thousands of people in the United States don't use a toothbrush daily, but I have yet to hear of a single inhabitant go on for years doing no harm, and then begin to turn into cancer. Of course, the lip is one of the most frequent sites of superficial cancer. Besides the cancers that are secondary to the precancerous conditions we have described above, such as indolent ulcer, horn keratosis and leukoplakia, a cancer may appear on the lip spontaneously.

Fever Blisters

The commonest change that occurs in the lips is the fever blister. So far as I know, the world is divided into two classes of people—the ones who want to know how to cure a fever blister and the ones who have a perfectly certain cure. The only suspicious thing about the perfectly certain cures is that no two of them are alike, so I have always hesitated to recommend anything to my readers.

Lip Cancer Neglected

It is an astonishing thing, in view of the campaign against cancer which stresses the fact that any lump or ulceration of the skin should be examined by a physician and also stresses the fact that internal examination should be made regularly after the age of forty, that cancer of the lip should be so frequently neglected and should show one of the highest death rates of any form of cancer.
