Allies Prepare New Blows

CRACK ALLIED BOMBING SQUADRONS regularly rain death and destruction on Germany and Nazi-occupied territory. It's all part of the type of offensive of which Prime Minister Churchill spoke when he said "the idea of trying to bomb the Axis into submission" is worth trying, anyway. Originally, military leaders called the extensive raids upon the enemy a "softening up" process. With the capture of Pantelleria through strong air and sea blows, it has been shown such tactics may result in much more than that. Opposing the Allied forces poised for invasion in England and Africa are no less than 100 Axis divisions and some of the world's most powerful fortifications. (International)

It takes guts to "hit the silk"

YET a paratrooper's confidence in his equipment makes his jump easier. His chute has been checked and rechecked. His overalls cover all uniforms is bullet-proof. His special boots are reinforced to protect his ankles from the shock of landing.

This is another example of how the Army designs special uniforms for special jobs. Down to the underwear — where styles and fabrics match the climate.

You can also have good styling and easy-fitting comfort in your underwear. For, during the past 40 years, the makers of HANES Underwear have kept up to the minute in knitting and tailoring underwear for comfort and long wear.

As one example, HANES Crotch-Guard Shorts (shown at right) provide gentle athletic support. For warm-weather comfort, wear them with a HANES Undershirt. Knit to exact chest size, its highly absorbent fabric evaporates perspiration quicker — keeps you cooler and your top-shirt fresher. P. H. Hanes Knitting Company, Winston-Salem, North Carolina.
