The End Is Not Yet

Believe in your heart's content, but don't become overly excited—yet.

Benito Mussolini's announcement of an extremely good news, and undoubtedly already nations the end of the war. But the end is not yet.

He picked a quarrel with Ethiopia and proceeded to conquer that country. He got Libya in North Africa, and set his goal as all of that region, at the same time demanding Nice and adjacent territories in southern France.

He hatched his life to the star of Adolf Hitler, but not so long afterward that star began to dim, until today it has about burned down to its socket and soon will go out.

What the immediate future will bring in earthshaking events is at the moment merely more than conjecture, but that momentous happenings are in the offing appears certain.

If Mussolini demanded aid from Hitler at the meeting a week ago, as generally is supposed, and if he were refused, as evidently he was, he was at the end of his rope.

timatum of ten days ago issued to the Italian people by Roosevelt and Churchill in which they gave the nation the choice of throwing Mussolini overboard and getting out of the war by unconditional surrender...

Now Mussolini is gone; his fascist regime is no more. One part of the ultimatum has been met; the other is to quit the war.

After that, what? Once this series of events is completed, Bulgaria and Rumania may not be long in following suit.

The question is whether or not he could longer resist. With new and even more determined pressure from the Soviet armies, the whole eastern front might fold up, and the Nazis might be exposed and forced to retreat in disorder and in disaster to loss of the war.

What happened in Italy could be the first in a chain of events to bring the war in Europe to a victorious end for the Allies before Christmas.

It is good news, and there will be more good news soon, else all signs will fail.

Hitler cannot stand on all the world. He knows this and his people know it. He may not be willing to admit it, but his people may, and they may do it at any time.

Control Marches On The overwhelmingly favorable vote in last Saturday's greater referendum gives the Federal government full control for another three years of the tobacco crop.

The campaign which preceded the voting was short; indeed it was necessary only to allow time enough to make preparations for the election and to notify farmers it was to be held.

One strange feature of the program is that in the face of an admitted and increasingly serious shortage of tobacco, growers are denied the right of material increase in this big money crop, for which the country and the world are crying.

Answer to that is that much of the land which would be put to tobacco is needed for food crops, and the contention in itself is certainly well grounded.

Now that control has been accepted by the farmers for another three years, they will have a long time in which to turn over in their minds the question of whether or not they wish to accept the system as a permanency.

In all probability the war will be over by that time or it is not just about everyone and everything will be regulated by the government, so that it will be more a matter of primitive subsistence than of elective policy.

Another item is the radio commentaries, who tackle such toughies as Castelnuovo, Callanissetta, Callagione and Conicattini without batting an eye or stumbling over a single syllable.

According to Factographs, the number of reminders is on the increase. Svelt-Mayne next Christmas Santa Claus will be able to carry along a couple of apes.

One commentator thinks Spain may yet join forces with the Axis. Just as though France isn't smart enough to know a bowl of very hot soup when he sees one!

Red stars, astronomers tell us, are cooler than blue-nosed ones. The hottest of them all, though, are the white ones on the wings of American bombers.

That Gander Haegs, the speedy Swede, is doing good missionary work by showing us Americans how to go places in a hurry without even an "A" even.

Redhead trainee of the future, we're told, will make no noise. The Chatterbox Chase-Chess it seems, will be replaced by the Sheboygan Shh-Shh.

The bugle call, "Retreat," is as old as the Crusades, but it never got such a workout as those Italian troops in Sicily are giving it these days.

Adolf Hitler may be a vegetarian, but even he ought to be pretty well fed up on his current diet of year grapes.

In New York a man named Thanks Up won a race. Wonder how many bettors were hitch-hiking on that one!

The most popular "rollback" of the moment is that of the Axis troops in Sicily.

SALLY'S SALLIES

BEYOND ITALY LIES THE ALPS!

Feed Supplies Still Scarce

Raleigh, July 26.—Scarcity of supplies continued evident in the feed market during the week ended July 20 with demand urgent throughout the period, the war food administration and the North Carolina department of agriculture report in the weekly market news service review.

The output of most feeds continued to move out on previous bookings week with current offerings remaining in many instances were apportioned to customers in relatively small quantities.

The stocks and processing report for June 30th shows a total of over 1 1/2 billion pounds farmers' stock peanuts milled during the 1942-43 season through June 30th. Growing conditions continue favorable in the North Carolina-Virginia areas but very few peanuts were offered by shellers in any section during last week.

Cattle receipts in Chicago showed little change from a week earlier. However, the supply of strictly grain-fed steers and yearlings was comparatively smaller than a week ago with good choice steers steady to strong.

This week's Chicago hog market closed around 25 cents higher and the bulk of the good and choice grades sold from 14.00 to 14.25.

In accordance with the terminal markets, the Carolina and Virginia cash hog buying stations advanced prices around 30 cents during the week. At the close, good and choice butchers topped at 13.75 in Rocky Mount, Smithfield and Whiteville, and at 13.90 in Clinton, Fayetteville, Florence, Lumberton and Richmond.

Spot cotton prices declined a little this week but futures prices advanced and the spread between spots and futures narrowed further. The volume of sales of spot cotton reported in the 10 markets was a little larger than in the preceding week and nearly double that in the corresponding week a year ago.

White Sees Bright Future

Charlotte, July 26.—Postwar demands for goods and development of new products coupled with tremendous shortages of many materials and commodities give the Carolinas great opportunities to vastly expand under free enterprise—their industrial development, Warren T. White, general industrial agent of the Seaboard Railway, told the presidents and secretaries of Chambers of Commerce in the Carolinas at their session here today.

"Aside from winning the war," he said, "the question of greatest importance is, whether our economic system can successfully withstand the shock incident to reconversion from a war economy to a normal peacetime basis. If business is given a reasonable degree of latitude, business will accomplish the task. With normal competitive factors allowed reasonable sway, the Carolinas will surge forward into an era of prosperity not witnessed before."

"On the other hand," Mr. White continued, "if free enterprise be displaced by arbitrary influences as in totalitarian governments, the abundant assets of the Carolinas will profit us but little."

"There will be some thirty-odd million war workers and men in the armed services who must be absorbed in private industry; our $5-billion dollar annual war production must be offset with an equivalent amount of peacetime goods and services."
