

Hush-Hush Complex Of Aspirants Disgusting

BY HELEN ESSARY
Central Press Columnist

Washington, Feb. 26.—I can't understand all this pretended shilly-shallying around of possible presidential candidates.

Since half the Republican party wants to be president of the United States, why in the name of a common sense and common decency should any of the crew say anything that is understood in politics to be a bid to say anything at all about their own chances?

In the present case, it is not that which was said, but the manner in which it was said, that is the cause of the disgust. It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting.

It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting. It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting. It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting.

It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting. It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting.

It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting. It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting.

It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting. It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting.

It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting. It is the hush-hush complex of the aspirants that is disgusting.

BARCLAY ON BRIDGE

GIVING UP THREE TRICKS EVERY ONCE in a while we see the need of giving the lead to an opponent deliberately, presenting one trick to him so he will have to lead back to us. Less frequently, we find a need of doing this when that player can get two tricks before he has to lead something which we can win. Once in a while, however, we strike the case in which we toss the lead to a player who can score three consecutive tricks before leading what we desire.

South had ample confidence in his partner when he bid only 2 No Trumps on that mighty collection of honors, with the ace of every suit, the king of one and the queens of the others. There was a good chance he might have been passed out shy of game, with enough strength opposite him to make it. As he butchered the hand, it was too bad his partner didn't leave him in the 2-2 No Trumps.
