

Negro Woman Taken From White Coach

Ruby Hinton, colored woman, was fined $10 and costs in Henderson police court today for disorderly conduct and failing to leave the white coach on a Seaboard passenger train here early today. She was given ninety days in jail but this was suspended, but she was required to pay an additional $25 for damage to Police Sergeant C. C. Harris' car, which she repaired in paying the officer, when he went into the train to take her off.

The woman is said to have boarded the train in New York and to have refused requests of train authorities to leave into the colored coach after the train passed Richmond. Railroad officials were allowed here for an effort to get the train out of the station and out of the city.

When Sergeant Harris learned of the coach and requested her to move into the colored coach, she refused and resisted the officer in performance of his duty, which was made out in charges against her in the police court hearing. She said she was from South Carolina and had lived in the North for several years.

This is the second time in a year or so that an incident of this kind has occurred here. Last summer a group of young men, some of whom were on a Seaboard train in New York and were on a white coach, refused to move into the colored coach. At that time, as on this case, railroad authorities were granted here for officers to get the train and several of the men actually resisted the officers and were taken into custody and held in the police court and jail.
