FROM TELEGRAPH HILL.

After the driving rain had beaten in from the open sea and drenched the counties here gathered, the skies brightened again so that overhead, intense blue reigned, blazed overhead, but, boxing the compass, the wide horizon was piled with billowing clouds built up for miles into the air, stirring unevenly across the undulating land, slowly toppling over. The blue, cold bay.

North Carolina Says Broughton Ideal Candidate

By LYNN NISBET
Daily Dispatch Bureau

Raleigh, July 13.—The situation with respect to nomination of vice president by the Democratic convention at Chicago next week has been complicated by President Roosevelt's statement that he "preferred Wallace" and the belief he will not overly insist upon the convention following his wishes in the matter.

While some Tar Heels, most of them admittedly around Raleigh, have been backing Governor Broughton for the vice presidential post they have realized all along the president had the thing in his hand. Next to Wallace Senator Barkley of Kentucky has been accorded best chance. It is now pointed out by Broughton backers that Barkley is too old. He will be 67 in November—that's five years older than the president. The Republicans already are campaigning against the "tired, old administration," and the president is confronted with his own position in 1937 that 70-year-old supreme court justices were unqualified and outmoded and ought to be shelved.

The Broughton group still thinks it has a good chance to put its man over, but admits a serious obstacle in the Roosevelt expressed preference for Wallace. However, Virginia has instructed delegates to vote against Wallace. South Carolina, Texas and Mississippi have declared their intent to wait for developments before making pledges of support, and North Carolina's 30 votes are committed to Broughton. The situation stands now, as to the southern attitude, that Wallace is too radical, Barkley is too old, Broughton is just about right. But the south often loses and right doesn't always win.
