

Border Belt Outvoted On Claims

Selling Hours And Prices Debated at Raleigh Gathering

By LANN NISBET
Daily Dispatch Bureau

Fish or fowl, members of a committee on Southern agriculture, who met here today, will vote on whether to sell their crops at a profit or at a loss. With many crops in the hands of the higher types of growers, the committee is figurative.

Some half a hundred growers, with a gathering of war-housemen gathered in the assembly room at the Raleigh building here Wednesday afternoon, debating the question of whether to sell their crops at a profit or at a loss. The committee is figurative.

A resolution was adopted which with Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia, asking the government to use all their war-housemen, including war-housemen, to sell their crops at a profit or at a loss. The committee is figurative.

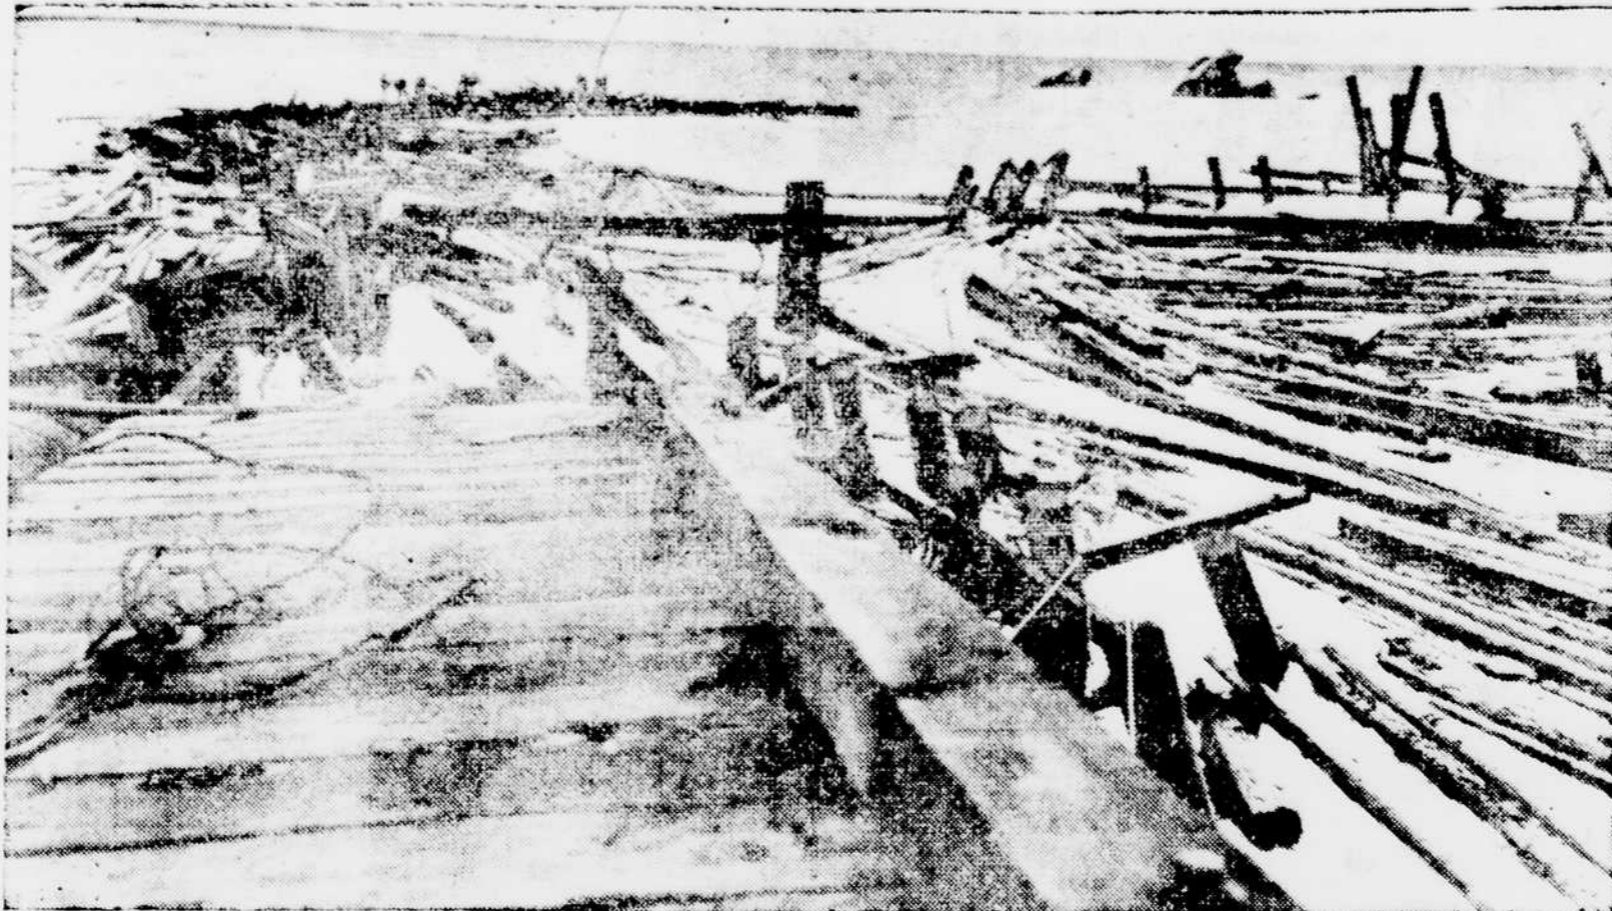

The real argument came when David Fuller, of Lenoir, president of the N. C. Border Belt Association, opposed with the group to include in the resolution the demand for longer selling hours than had been granted in the U. S. Border Belt Association. He pointed out that his belt had no such problem, in that there were no war-housemen and no war-housemen.

Eastern belt growers and war-housemen alike opposed putting that in the resolution about prices. W. A. Lamm, Wilson attorney, and J. E. Wasson, Pitt county farmer and president of the Farm Bureau, led the attack against combining the two ideas.

The border talks stressed their geographic as well as their economic position. Situated between Georgia and Eastern Carolina, their marketing days are limited, and if they could not sell their crops at a definite time they will not sell at all.

What finally worked out of the argument was designation of Lamm and Fuller to work a new committee.

WHERE MUNITION SHIPS EXPLOSION KILLED HUNDREDS

Thrusting from the water in the background (upper right) of this dramatic picture of a stranding is the hull of one of the two 6,000-ton munition ships which exploded in Port Chicago in upper San Francisco Bay, Calif., and brought instant death to 250 or more persons and grave injury to hundreds more.

The U. S. Naval depot and docks where the ships were being loaded were reduced to the mass of wreckage shown above. Pieces of the ship were found more than a mile away. U. S. Navy photo.

When the explosion occurred, the big ship was being loaded with munitions. The explosion was so great that it was heard in the city of San Francisco. The explosion was so great that it was heard in the city of San Francisco.
