Says Nation Can Avert Depression

Goodyear Official Is Optimistic In Address to Lions

There should be no depression following this war, because the nation is in much better position to fight itself than at the end of the last world war, Arthur C. Horrocks, director of public relations for the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company of Akron, Ohio, told the Henderson Lions club and a large number of invited guests Wednesday evening at the weekly dinner meeting at the club at the Vance hotel.

Mr. Horrocks was presented by Will Mitchell. President J. C. Mann presided.

Americans in three years have saved $100 billion, coming from people in all strata of the nation's society. There was no such backlog in 1919. Demands for civilian goods immediately following the end of hostilities will be sufficient to keep the nation's factories going for a long time to come, the speaker said.

He said that a survey showed that America's postwar plans in the order named, are cars and automatic new homes, then food and furniture. The people desire to live well with which to buy these things, Mr. Horrocks declared. He said, too, he doesn't worry too much about the $300 billion debt for a nation that can save $100 billion in three years can carry the obligation. He declared America today has the greatest opportunity in its history, and urged effort toward building the home community.

One reason why there should be no postwar depression, are the peculiar characteristics of the American people, the speaker said. Some of the things that make Americans click, he listed as initiative of the American youth; ambition, meaning not a wishbone but a backbone; determination, perseverance, and a passion for knowledge.

Plans are being made for the Chamber peace era, but that doesn't mean the war is over, he thought, however. The end was not too far away. The speaker praised the cooperative spirit of the American people in accepting the sacrifices imposed upon them in the last three years, but declared these were almost as nothing in comparison with the privations of men in the service, and of people in other nations.

"Your trade position for tomorrow . . . here, you can't see it until tomorrow, but it is here," he said, and forecasted the great [illegible] synthetic rubber production and fast growth of the commodity are constantly being improved and would continue so far, he said that it would make the United States and British and Dutch rubber supplies in the East inadequate to meet peace needs.

Visitors at the meeting, many of them guests of President Joe Mann, were introduced as follows: Harvey Cheek, of Union, S. C., of the Salvation Army, Burnett, of Henderson and former Lions member; R. W. Brown, Sam Hargrave, Henry A. Dennis, R. C. Hobgood, H. H. Cooper, J. W. Sanders, J. B. Hicks, Fills Gammon, M. L. Finch, S. B. Harris, K. L. Barton, Fennell Mitchell, Lloyd Daniel, C. O. Seifert, J. C. Gardner, J. L. Wester.

By preparing these reports as soon as possible after the death, an employer, widow and children is helped greatly as payments cannot be expected from Social Security benefits until the death benefit is reported.
