What will become of Hitler? History Gives Examples of the Fate of Men Who Have Lived by the Sword

NAPOLEON'S LAST DAYS WERE A DREARY EXILE ON ST. HELENA

HITLER'S FATE IS IN GREAT DOUBT NOW AS WAR NEARS END

ONE OF THE EARLIEST examples of the fate of a man who has lived by the sword is that of Julius Caesar. He was captured by the Romans and led across the Alps in chains. His fate was a grim one, as he was eventually executed.

THE TURMOIL AND WAR in Europe in the 19th century was ended by Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo. After his capture, he was exiled to the remote island of St. Helena, where he spent his last days in a dreary and lonely exile.

FOLLOWING THE DISASTER that struck his empire in 1918, Kaiser Wilhelm II fled to the Netherlands and then to the United States. He was eventually exiled to Doorn, where he spent his days chopping wood and living in a state of poverty.

NOW THAT THE EUROPEAN WAR draws to a close, speculation is rife as to what will be done with Adolf Hitler. According to the present trend of thought, there is little likelihood that he will be sent into exile. Secretary of State Cordell Hull recently predicted that a lot of Nazis are going to be shot when the war ends. Presumably the No. 1 candidate will be Hitler. The Secretary named him foremost on the list of the Nazi war criminals to be dealt with.

SAFETY DEVICE FOR LANDING GLIDERS

This safety device in the form of three skids under the nose of a glider is the invention of Lt. Col. Warner R. Carey, director of supply and maintenance at the Lenoir County Army Air Base. The invention, for which Col. Carey was awarded the Legion of Merit by the War Department, will reduce accidents by 85 per cent, he estimates, by enabling a glider to stop 250 to 300 feet short of a landing. Danger of rising over is materially reduced. Col. Carey is shown by a glider equipped with the new device.
