Butner Recondition Program Rebuilds Soldier Returnees

Camp Butner, April 13.—When men enter the Army, the military training program prepares them physically and mentally for the duties of a soldier. Drill, marches and bivouacs, and rigorous physical training develop the basic qualities of endurance and stamina. With specialized training, special courses, and maneuvers, the soldier develops into the first class fighting man, enabling him to perform successfully the duties of a soldier.

But a soldier wounded in battle or rendered ineffective by a long illness loses the efficiency and general qualities of a first class fighting man. Concern over himself, the uncertainty of recovery from his wounds and illness, anxiety over personal affairs help to contribute to the loss of confidence which results in a loss of man hours in support of the total war effort.

If the soldier is to reap the greatest benefit from Army Medical Service, his physical, mental, and emotional needs must be considered. Recognizing this responsibility to the soldier and to the war effort, the surgeon general has established a reconditioning program as part of professional medical care.

According to Brig. Gen. Roy C. Hedges, commanding officer of the U. S. Army General and Convalescent Hospital, Camp Butner, the purpose of the reconditioning program is to accelerate the return to duty of convalescent patients in the highest state of physical and mental efficiency consistent with their capacities and the type of duty to which they are being returned.

The Cause and Treatment of Diabetes Insipidus

By HERMAN N. BUNDES, M. D.

THERE IS a small but very important gland located in the brain. It is called the hypophysis, although doctors usually refer to it as the pituitary gland. When this gland is damaged, a group of symptoms called diabetes insipidus may develop. Doctor George M. Jones, of Michigan, has made a study of a number of patients who had this disorder.

The symptoms of diabetes insipidus consist of the passing of large amounts of urine having a low specific gravity, which means that the urine does not contain many salts or other materials. The specific gravity of a fluid is its weight as compared with the weight of water. There is also an increased thirst in this disorder, which is natural since so much fluid is lost from the body.

Diabetes insipidus is a disorder which occurs in young people. The average age at the time of onset in the cases studied by Doctor Jones was about 21 years and in more than one-third of the patients, the disorder started before the age of 10 years.

Many of the older patients who have the condition probably developed it because of damage produced by syphilis.

In all of the cases studied, an attempt was made to determine the cause of the diabetes insipidus as well as to determine the response made to various forms of treatment. The usual treatment consisted of the giving of an extract from the back part of the pituitary gland. This was given either by injection under the skin, or was put into the nose in the form of a liquid or jelly, or was injected into a muscle. When it was given under the skin, from two to four injections were employed each day. The intranasal treatment was also employed several times a day.

It was found that the diabetes insipidus was produced in some instances by a tumor of the pituitary gland. Some cases were due to a chronic inflammation of the brain. Syphilis was responsible in a few instances.

If the diabetes insipidus is produced by some disease which can be treated, such as syphilis, such treatment can be carried out. In those instances in which the disorder is due to a tumor, X-ray treatments may be employed. Operations for removal of tumors of the pituitary gland cannot be carried out successfully because of the location of the pituitary gland at the base of the brain. It would appear that the best method of treatment is the use of an injection of the pituitary gland extract dissolved in oil and given into a muscle. The least satisfactory method is the use of the intranasal jelly. Giving a diet low in salt may also be of some help.

Diabetes insipidus in itself is not a serious disorder, but is a troublesome one. However, the conditions which produce it are usually serious in nature and require prompt treatment.

43 YEARS of Fair Dealing

In 1902, an ambitious young man started a 'dry goods store in a Wyoming mining town. He was confident that hard work and fair dealing would make his store a success—and he was right.

The little store attracted people from miles around, as they learned that Mr. Penney sold dependable merchandise at prices as low as he could make them.

So the store grew... and grew... into two stores... into four stores... into 8... 16... 32... into SIXTEEN HUNDRED, AND MORE... —all in 43 short years!

But this is more than the success story of an energetic, ambitious American. Mr. Penney himself has said that business success is only the by-product of right principles... the determination to serve honestly and to share with fellow-workers and customers the rewards of hard work and loyalty.

Through all these years... fat years and lean... years of war and years of peace... the Penney Company has progressed unceasingly: by Fair Dealing!
