Issue 1921. A remnant still remains even in the remotest of Japan, until the mighty Gaid.

China Celebrates

What the Fourth of July is to Americans the tenth of October is to the Chinese. Both are expressions of the independence of the two peoples. On October 10, 1911, thirty-four years ago today, the Chinese people won their independence from the Manchu dynasty...

Dr. Sun, an outstanding patriot as well as national leader, resigned the presidency in favor of Yuan Shih-kai. Yuan betrayed the trust by attempting to restore a monarchy...

The Chinese national government ultimately consolidated itself under Chiang Kai-shek, and in 1927 the present republic was established in Nanking.

For the Chinese people the celebration this year means more than the overthrow of the Manchu dynasty. For the generation it means freedom after eight years of a war that cost them an estimated 10,000,000 military casualties and displacement and loss of territory...

A Chinese newspaper says that a group of young men and women are planning to visit the United States and bring back with them the latest in American culture and science...

In 1941, Japan began the military campaign which resulted in the capture of Manchuria in an unprovoked war which was the first step in Japan's ambitious plan for territorial aggrandizement through East Asia...

How Japan was stopped is now history. So that Chinese independence day tomorrow is a "double tenth"; for, in addition, the United States and Britain, two years ago, renounced extra-territorial rights in China, and new treaties soon are to be drawn up to make these agreements effective and to usher in a really new day for China.

The United States always has been friendly to China. It is today, Nor is this good will based on selfishness—at least not entirely. It is largely a sympathetic desire to help this ancient race to new heights of freedom and development looking toward goals that have already been achieved and others hoped for here in America.

There are many ways in which assistance can be extended, and not all of them are financial. Educational and spiritual leadership can be supplied, along with leadership in economic development, and erection of a stable democratic state. But this aid must be shown of selfishness and greed and of the desire for exploitation. Our hands of help, capable of the greatest good, must be offered in a spirit of friendship, sympathy and affection. With this in mind today, thirty-fourth anniversary of China's independence, as designated in the United States as China Friendship Day, it affords an opportunity for the beginning of an era of good will between two great peoples that could be without precedent in a wicked, scheming world.

Cashing Of Bonds

Cashing of U. S. savings bonds by the people has reached such a point that it is now necessary to purchase them in larger quantities than ever before. Sales were $314 million last month and registrations were $328 million. That is about a million dollars more than in the month of September.

A year ago, however, for the month of September, sales and registrations were only $100 million. The reason for this is that in the year of 1944, the people were not so sure of the future. In the month of September of 1944, the people were not so sure of the future. In the month of September of 1944, the people were not so sure of the future.

At the present time, however, the people are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future.

All through the year, however, the people are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future.

Laval's Fate

Pierre Laval could scarcely have expected a fate different from that which has come to him, in view of his enthusiastic collaboration with the Germans following the fall of France. He has an aim, to be sure, as all criminals do, and as all traitors do, to escape their evil fates.

The former Vichy chief of government, puppet of the Nazis, lacks the highest respect and the intimacy of age to whom, in his fever should he appeal. General De Gaulle for many years a combination saved old Marshal Laval. Laval is a much younger man and had greater ambition.

At the present time, however, the people are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future. They are more sure of the future.

Turkeys will be plentiful this year. It's news like this that makes autumn anything but the poets' "gloomy" season.

IN MEMORIAM. In sad but loving remembrance of my brother, James Scott Norwood, 82 c. who was drowned at Jacksonville, Florida, two years ago, October 10.

I cannot say, and will not say, That he is dead—He is just away! With a cheerful smile and a wave of his hand, He has wandered into an unknown land.

It was in the month of October, On one fair Sunday eve, That the Heavenly Father took you, dear Jim, From this war-torn world Into a home of peace and rest.

Out there amid the blue water, So many miles away, We didn't know, back home, That God was taking you from us that day.

No one knows how I miss you, dear Jim, And the tears I had shed, If we could only laugh and talk Together as we did a few years ago. Then life again would be worth while.

Taken so young, so quickly, Why should it be? My dearest brother, Who meant so much to me, Why should it be, I cannot tell, But Our Heavenly Father who knoweth all things, Some day I'll know and understand.

So now our circle has been broken And your voice forever is still, But God will help us bear our sorrows, For I know it was His will.

I pray, dear Jim, that some day We will meet on that golden shore, Where all our sorrows will be washed away. Then we will be with Jesus, Never more from Him to stray. His Sister, MRS. W. T. ELLIOTT, Route 3.

Pattern for Love by LORENA CARLETON

CHAPTER FORTY SANDRA enjoyed having Mrs. Fenimore as her guest, particularly after her approval of Spenser's work made her manner less austere. It was fun to visit, talking about Chicago and friends there—Capitola, Mr. Benet, Bob Wakeman, others in the store. And persons, less close to Sandra's old life, but of interest nevertheless.

"I've been here four days," the gray-haired woman said. "That, for me, is an orgy of a vacation. Especially now when there is so much work to be done." She looked steadily at Sandra for a long moment. "Is that the hat Spenser selected for you? The one he bought before the train time?"

"No. It isn't that one. But it is another he selected for me. And bought for me. He feels like giving a growing young girl things that I haven't the heart to stop him." She chuckled. "Anyway, this was only four ninety-eight, in the basement of Brooks Downtown."

"I don't underestimate yourself, Sandra dear. You have helped Spenser, just as I knew you would." The noise of the train changing in just then made Mrs. Fenimore raise her voice. "You're quite a girl, Sandra! Quite a girl!" "I like hearing you say so. But don't forget that Spenser has helped me, too."
