As far as the end is from the world, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.—Psalm 103:12.

Primary Mixtures

Contests in the State Democratic primary this spring will be a mixture, as usual. This pertains especially to congressional races, where there will be fights in eight of the twelve districts, in contrast to prospects at one time that there might be scraps in only three or four.

In the fourth district, our Representative Cooley is handed another term without worry or concern. No opposition for him developed, and the State Board of Elections has certified him as the nominee without going into the primary, which means he will be reelected.

The district in which Vance county is located will have no judgeship issue this year, and Solicitor E. R. Tyler has breezed through the filing period without opposition, and has been certified as the party's nominee, which means his election also.

As matters now shape up, Vance county will have no voting interest in the May 23 election except on local candidates. As this is written, not a single announcement has been made for any of these offices, though most incumbents are expected to stand for reelection. April 23 is the deadline for filing for county offices.

This is what is known as an "off-year" in politics. That is to say, there is no presidential election, nor will a governor be elected in North Carolina, nor any of the four-year State ones on the Raleigh administration.

But if sharp contests develop locally, it will mean a heavy turnout of voters in the May 23 balloting. Local interest is almost always the focal point for stimulus in getting citizens to the polls. But at the present time there are few signs of contests for all the county offices. The next few weeks will tell the tale as to that, and the course of events will be watched for whatever the developments may be.

Hints on Etiquette.

If there are no looser sugar tongs provided, lump sugar may be taken from the bowl with the fingers.

Today's Horoscope.

You should cultivate self-confidence, be less restless and anxious, as you have ability. You love your home life and your circle of friends, though small, are a strong force in your life. You will always be happy. A friendly letter should cheer you up early this morning. Don't use imaginative talk later this morning, as it will not be understood. At noontime expect luncheon or other social dates to be canceled. Don't try to solve conundrums of any kind in the middle of the afternoon and this evening make every effort to create a good impression. Someone new in your life late this evening may turn out to be "the one."

One-Minute Test Answers.

- 1. Naomi's kinsman in the Book of Ruth. He married Ruth.
2. Naomi was Ruth's mother-in-law.
