RACE AGAINST SOUND.

The fliers challenge sound,
Faster they come,
Creeping up on it mile by roaring mile,
Two, three, four, five, six hundred miles an hour.

The engines grow more powerful,
the design changes, the screw gives way to jet, Piston to gas-turbine;
Tails are discarded, only a flying wing

Rips through the air. But now the air,

The soft, the kind, the friendly air, that slipped

Over the stream-lined surface,
Changes sides,

Declares itself associate of sound

Against the intruder, forms a solid wall, splinters and smashes and strikes.

The flier
Builds stronger engines, air-frames more robust

To meet this new hostility, adds to his jet

Rocket propulsion. Air and sound combine

In vain; the flier shall break through the one

And overtake the other, till at last Beyond the barrier (sound left far behind)

The vanquished air shall make submission

And at the approaches to four-figured speed

slip gently past the flier unopposed.

As now with atoms harnessed to his hand

He presses on the startled heels of light.
