What the Southern white man had to do was to see that his laboring class had work, and had it at home. He was ristri t d to one class of laborers and one locality. And he was obliged to conform his business also to the sort of work his men could do and what was most profitable.

Thus the persistence of the Southern man in adhering year after year to the same course of life did not arise from incapacity to engage successfully in some other, but purely from his surhim if the earth beneath his feet was after.
