—a good place for your men to take breath before the assault." He had visited the orchard many times during his former stay.

By this time the Confederacy was in its death throes. Having arrived at Goldsboro Sherman went to Fort Monroe for an interview with Gen. Grant and Mr. Lincoln. He has given the testimony of Admiral Purvis, who was present at the meeting, to show that Mr. Lincoln was ready to have almost any terms accepted from Gen. Johnston rather than have his son Lee and the rest of the army starved to death.

the department of the Cumberland to report to Gen. Robert Anderson, once captain of the battery in which Sherman served at Fort Monroe, S. C.
Buckner was at the time supposed to be marching on Louisville, and Sherman, who was endeavoring to preserve his neutrality, and there was a very small Union force at hand with which to make a defense. Sherman advised the immediate draught of his such volunteers and home guards as could be collected. Gen. Anderson's health was not equal to the command of so many conflicting masses of men on the 8th of October, 1861, he published an order relinquishing his command, which fell on Sherman as next in rank in that department.

self an unwilling martyr. "Looking at his field," says Messrs. Nicolay and Hay in their "Life of Lincoln," "with a purely professional eye the disproportion between the amount of his task and the individual means for its accomplishment oppressed him like a nightmare."
His impatient temper soon set his rather sarcastic tongue in most injudicious action. Secretary Cameron came in person to listen to his complaints and asked what he wanted.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston was in his front with an army of 42,000 men. Johnston was afterward joined by an additional force of 22,000 men, and the two armies numbered 64,000. By the 1st of June Sherman had lost 10,000 men, and Johnston 10,000. Johnston's army, showing a surplus of 37,000 for Sherman.

It is interesting to note the stock from which these men sprang. The Sherman family came from New York. One branch produced Roger Sherman, William M. Everts and George F. Hoar. Another gave us the two brothers, Senator John and Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman. The father of these two distinguished men, Charles H. Sherman, was a judge of the Ohio supreme court, and during the war of 1812 had acted as commissary of subsistence. Being a great admirer of the Shawnee chief Tecumseh, when the child destined to become one of the great chiefs of the civil war was born Judge Sherman gave him for a second name "Tecumseh."

Opening of the Civil War.
His resignation was accepted on the 1st of April, 1861. He had already sought the presidency of a St. Louis horse railroad, and meanwhile visited his brother, Senator John Sherman, who introduced him to the president as just from Louisiana.

Gen. Sherman reports the interview in his memoirs.
"Ah," said Mr. Lincoln, "how are they getting along down there? I said, 'They are getting along very well, and they are preparing for war.' 'Oh, well,' said he, 'I guess we'll manage to keep house.' I was silenced, said no more to him and soon left him as best you can, 'I am glad that I broke out on John, damning the politicians generally, and saying: 'You've got things in a huff, and you may get them out as best you can.'"
