In the garden,—by the way.—
Everywhere, in dusk and sunlight,
They have smiled the live-long day;

Heaven sent,—divinely born Pure and sweet 'mid dearth and darkness

Brave and staunch amid the storm,-

Emblems of the soul's fair graces,

Marshaled in a winged array, Now besiege the freighted branches.

As the Summer takes her flight.

Warbles now a minor strain;

Chorusing the weird refain;

Winging to a sunnier clime,— Where 'tis ever summer time.

Golden-rod its plumage sways:

Chant a requiem to her praise,-

For the Reaper, waiting nigh?

Words of love like roses blow:

So,—thy summer come and go.
