Weak, Irritable, Tired

"I Was No Good on Earth."
 Dr. Miles' Nervine strengthens the weak, builds up the broken down constitution, and permanently cures every kind of nervous disease.
 "About one year ago I was afflicted with nervousness, sleeplessness, creeping sensation in my legs, slight palpitation of my heart, distracting confusion of the mind, nervous loss or lapse of memory. Weighted down with care and worry, I completely lost appetite and felt my vitality seeping out. I was weak, irritable and tired. My weight was reduced to 100 lbs. In fact I was no good on earth."
 A friend brought me Dr. Miles' Nervine. I tried it and I finally decided to try a bottle. Dr. Miles' Nervine cured me. I am now a healthy man. My appetite returned and my weight increased.
 "When I had taken the sixth bottle my weight increased to 126 lbs. The sensation in my legs was gone; my nerves steadied completely; my memory was fully restored. My brain seemed clearer than ever. I felt as good as any man on earth."
 Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit all drug stores. Price, 50 cents. Sold by Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Brave Naval Officer.

EXPLOITS OF CAPT. MAFFIT OF THE CONFEDERATE NAVY.
 Thrilling Experience on a Blockade Runner—He Got in Some Close Places Sometimes, But Pulled His Boat Out in Safety—Sent His Ship's Papers and Other Valuable Records to the Bottom of Charleston Harbor Rather Than Have Them Captured.—His Escape to England.
 [Southport Leader.]
 Mr. John L. Maffit, son of Capt. John Maffit, and brother of Lieut. Eugene Maffit of the famous Confederate cruiser Alabama, is in the city. He tells many interesting incidents in connection with the Alabama. After sailing about destroying Yankee commerce for several months the Florida put into Charleston, which, to their surprise, they found in the hands of the Yankees and themselves surrounded. Lieut. Maffit then ordered that all his documents, including those of the Alabama and Florida, be placed in tin boxes with ropes tied around them and lowered into the sea. A man stood by ready to cut the ropes at the command. When capture seemed inevitable Lieut. Maffit gave the word and the history of the most famous ship that ever floated, with many important State Documents were sent to the bottom. By great good luck, however, the Florida made her escape and sailed to sea—Fayetteville Observer.
 Our esteemed contemporary is rather mixed in reference to these scraps of Confederate history.
 Capt. John Newland Maffit was a Lieut. Commander in the navy when the Civil War broke out. He was a great favorite with the Navy Department and with his fellow officers, on account of his superior abilities and his genial whole souled nature. He performed well known service in the U. S. Coast Survey, and his name will be found upon the best charts of our coast at the present time. He was associated with the celebrated Prof. Bache, who held Maffit in very high esteem.
 Capt. Maffit resigned from the old Navy with extreme reluctance, and from a high sense of duty to the State of his adoption, North Carolina, he having been born at sea.
 During the Civil War Maffit was placed in command of the steamer Oreto, which subsequently became famous as the Florida. After two years service afloat, during which time he destroyed much of the Northern commerce, his health became enfeebled, he was ordered home, and granted several months' leave of absence. His active spirit, however, would not permit him to remain long idle, and his great skill and daring led to his appointment as commander of several blockade runners engaged in bringing war stores for the Confederacy from Nassau, Bermuda, to ports in the South.
 Among the steamers which he ran during the Confederacy were the Gordon, Lillian, Floris (named for his daughter the late Mrs. J. G. Wright), and Owl. The last named boat was one of the most noted blockade runners of the war. When Fort Fisher was captured the Federals were careful to set the usual harbor lights which guided the blockade runners to an anchorage after they had passed the fleet outside the bar, and quite a number of unfortunate Southern steamers which had braved the dangers of the ever watchful cruiser, were thus decoyed to their doom unaware of the greater danger which awaited them in the supposed friendly port.
 Among this number was the steamer Owl, commanded by Maffit, but did he surrender like the others when he found he was caught in a trap, and surrounded by a hostile fleet, from which escape seemed impossible, not a bit of it. After communicating very briefly with Fort Caswell, and being informed that a train was already laid to blow up this last Confederate stronghold, and that it was being hurriedly evacuated, he returned to his ship, and surrounded as he was by the enemy, he boldly rushed for the main bar under a storm of shot and shell which raked the little boat fore and aft, and which well nigh sent her to the bottom.
 On reaching the open sea Maffit determined to try Charleston, which was unknown to him also in the hands of the Federals. True, the Owl was loaded with gunpowder which the Confederacy and the risk of destruction would have been appalling to a man of extraordinary courage, but Maffit did not hesitate; duty to the South was the first consideration, the risk to himself and his crew a secondary matter. He steered straight for Charleston bar and entered the harbor on the following night.
 Having anchored in the channel which still bears his name, he soon found himself surrounded by the Federal fleet, apparently bottled up and hermetically sealed. Hastily descending to his cabin he gathered together his invaluable record of the cruise of the Florida and other papers for which any price would now be paid, and placed them in a tin box, accompanied by an iron weight, accompanied by the hands of a trustworthy quartermaster with orders to lash the bag over the rail, and when escape was impossible and capture inevitable, to cut away the lashings and send the bag to the bottom. Capt. Maffit then dove up

BLATANT BLATHERSKITE

BELLIGERENT BOUTELLE, FROM THE STATE OF MAINE.
 He Made a Spectacle of Himself in the National House of Representatives and is the Laughing Stock of Sensible People Everywhere—Opposed to Senator Hill's Bill to Permit ex-Confederates to Hold Positions as Commissioned Officers in the Army and Navy.
 [Wilmington Messenger.]
 Have you ever heard of the great American captain, General Napoleon Caesar Wellington Boutelle, from the frozen regions of Maine, and now a member of the United States House of Representatives? He is the great soldier of our country. He neither "ought, bled nor died" in the war between the States, but he has been on the war, path ever since it closed, and has been engaged in some very sanguinary campaigns ever since the Maineites sent him to Washington. He is a terrific fighter in peace time, and an extreme South-hater at all times. It is his meat and drink by day, and his sleep by night. He is a bloodiest soldier "in the fiery heat of battle." He has slaughtered with his tongue more Confederates than the Pennsylvania "Buck-tails" killed in the war. Gen. Epaminondas Alexander Frederick the Great Boutelle is simply and generally and particularly immense. He deserves a statue of brass and a life in jest-books with newspaper portraits of immortality.
 Well, this Gen Boabadi Don Quixote Tecumseh, Sherman Boutelle, of Tiger Rendezvous, Maine, has been flashing his tomahawk a la Blaine in the House and threatening the scalps of the harmless men of the South who sit in such imminent danger from his kindling and consuming wrath. And what is it all about? Attend:
 The fight began because of a question raised by a bill of Senator Dave Hill's relating to the appointment of officers in the army or navy from among those who served in the Confederacy, who previous to the outbreak of the war, held commissions as officers in the United States service. The bill passed the Senate and was favorably reported to the House by Mr. Hull, chairman of the committee on Military Affairs. This aroused the mighty ire of the great soldier, and like a lion from his lair, he jumped into the middle of the arena, gave a horrid roar and then pranced around and howled and split the air and swore it would never do. "What! Allow traitors to fight for their country! Neavre, Neavre, Mr. Speaker! I will unsheathe my gigantic sword of death and squash the entire South, before I will stand by consenting to such a disgrace and wrong." And then Gen. Sheridan Cromwell Kirkpatrick Boutelle, all the way from Maine, blew a fearful blast through his fingers, and swinging and circling over his fiery head his terrific blade of death he danced the war dance of the Sioux, and said "I am ready to die right now for my country." And the galleries looked on at the fine fun, and the pages at nexters in silence, and wondered what next. It was awful times you bet. It brought out some daring patriots to the rescue, and Gen. Grosvenor and Gen. Pickler fought side by side with Gen. Walker and Gen. Wheeler, late of the Confederacy, against the terrific and battle-breathing Gen. Bombastes Furioso Ben Butler Boutelle, of the Maine contingent of decayed and delayed war patriots and irresponsibles.
 But all of the frantic appeals and snorting periods of the great soldier's eloquence were powerless. When the vote came he stood well nigh aghast in his glory, and yet he had not the decency to fold his mantle about him, cover his head in shame and die then and there. He rode his prancing Rozinante right at and over the dismounted Southern Brigadiers, and yet strange to say he was the only soldier who got a fall and was mud covered. When he voted no "solitary and alone," he evidently felt like uncle Gabe at the meeting; he knew he was hit hard.
 "And he smiled a kind of sickly smile, and rested up on the floor. And the subsequent proceedings interested him no more."
 So this man of war thirty odd years after peace was declared, stands rebuked and should be spurned. His floating plumes droop now, and his tin sword is broken, and his absurd call for boots and saddles rings out as the cry of a fool with one hobby. This flouting of the Southern soldiers, and this flaunting of the old bloody shirt, faded and dilapidated and full of holes have had their evil day. There will be fanatics and haters so long as they survive, but the South is all right. If this country should by any foolish act of the Government be drawn into a war with some great Foreign Power, and the 12,000,000 of Southern whites should refuse to lift a hand the demagogues of the ranting type who carry on war in peace times should be put in the front of battle. But when war shall come the South will do its full duty.
 Southern States Settlers' Convention.
 A convention of Northern born settlers in the Southern States has been called to meet at Southern Pines, N. C., on Tuesday, May 6th, 1896. All the Northern born settlers in North Carolina are earnestly requested to be present. GEO. L. FRENCH, President N. C. Settlers' Association.

The South.

Southern Real Estate and Financial Journal.
 But a few short years ago it was only the West which was used to conjure by, and would draw the life and energy from all sections, and conjure the money from the pocket of the capitalist, but that time has passed. It has gone into the regions of innocuous desuetude, and now, standing out in letters of living fire on the banner of progress we see the words "The South!" pictured, and feel a thrill as its name sounds forth upon the air, and the words seem painted upon the sky, so clearly and distinctly does the picture of the South show to our minds as its name is pronounced. Not the South of former years except in its delightful climate and its magnificent resources, but the South as it is to-day sending out its invitation to all good people to "come and help us." In the South can be found the grandest opportunities which have ever been offered, either for the investment of capital or for the poor man who wishes to make for himself and his family home. Here he can buy land upon payments which his fuel bill would cost him in North, and that land will produce everything needed for his living, with an amount of work far less than would be necessary for his support in a more profitable climate. The editor of the Real Estate and Financial Journal never wearies of singing the praises of the Sunny South, his adopted home, and is a firm and ardent believer in the wealth of its resources and the grand possibilities of its future. Come South, look and you will believe.

Profitable Tobacco Growing.

The following reference to a well known and successful farmer of a Nash county, is taken from the Wilmington Messenger:
 We find this in some exchange:
 "The Tarboro Southern says a Nash farmer last year made a clear profit of $8,000 on tobacco and other crops."
 That refers to Mr. T. W. Avent, we suppose. We saw it mentioned lately that he averaged on a portion of his crop $350, an acre for 1895. That is interesting. Can he state with accuracy how many acres this averaged, what was the average of his entire crop, and how much the total acreage? How much did he expend for fertilizers, what did his labor cost, and in fact what was the full cost of production per acre? What the amount in pounds of his total crop? Statistics are valuable and tangible. It is extraordinary success to make $350, at present low prices, per acre with tobacco. In the past, when tobacco ran high, we have known Gravville farmers to average for entire crops of tobacco alone from $400 to $600 per acre. But it is not so now.

Twenty-Four Presidents.

Washington first of the presidents stands, Next placid John Adams attention commands. Tom Jefferson's third on the glorious score, And square Jimmy Madison counts number four. Fifth on the record is plain James Monroe. And John Quincy Adams is sixth, don't you know? Next Jackson and Martin Van Buren, true blue. And Harrison, ninth, known as Tippecanoe. Next Tyler, the first of the Vice to rise. Then Polk and then Taylor, the second who dies? Next Fillmore, a Vice, takes the President's place. And small Franklin Pierce is fourteenth in the train. The great name of Lincoln make all others dim. Next to Johnson comes Grant, with the laurel and bay. And next after Grant then comes Rutherford. Next Garfield, then Arthur, then Cleveland the fat. Next Harrison, wearing his grand-dad's hat. Adroit Little Ben twenty-third in the train. And last on the list, behold Cleveland again.

An Affidavit.

This is to certify that on May 11th, I walked to Melick's drug store on a pair of crutches and bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm for inflammatory rheumatism which had crippled me up. After using three bottles I am completely cured. I can cheerfully recommend it.—Charles H. Wetzel, Sunbury, Pa.
 Sworn and subscribed to before me on August 10, 1894.—Walter Shipman, J. P. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by M. Dorsey, druggist.

Half of the burdens of life are caused by worrying; and more than half our worrying is about the future. As we know nothing of the future, not even one hour beyond the present, but can only surmise and imagine, it follows that by far the greater part of all our worrying is simply about imaginary things. Hence the folly of it. The great difficulty, however, is that we cannot help it by any direct effort of the will. There is only one cure for worry; and that is to work so hard and so earnestly at our present task as to have no time for regret.

Let misfortune be the spur to greater effort.

An Inevitable Industrial Revolution.

[Worcester (Mass) Spy.]
 A careful study of the coal and iron resources of the South, and of the progress already made in their development, leads to the conclusion that the abundance and cheapness of these two important articles, upon which a multitude of our greatest industries are based, must inevitably lead to the transfer of many of them from their present locations to others in the vicinity of where these raw materials are produced. It is one of the industrial revolutions of the future that will make the South the home of vast plants for the manufacture of rails, of structural iron and steel, of water pipes, and of many other things of large weight and bulk, in which the question of long hauls is one of grave economic importance.

Private John Allen's Story.

"I went up to Chickamauga with Judge Newman and Colonel Barbour Thomson," said he. "I walked about the field and heard hundreds of old fellows talking about the spot on which they had been wounded, and telling all manner of marvelous stories. I was not at Chickamauga, but I was in other battles, and when a man tells you that he can pick out spots where all sorts of things occurred in a battle this many years afterwards, you may put him down as a liar.
 "Well, everybody up there was lying, and I had to do a little myself."
 "I was standing by the railroad station at the foot of one of the hills when an old veteran accosted me and asked if I knew when the next train left for Rome."
 "No," said I, "this is the first time I have been here in thirty-two years and my friend, when I stand here and look upon this hill, recalling the charge I made up it through a shower of shot and shell, how I dashed my horse right through a federal battery, leaping seven different cannon and emerged from a shower of bullets unscathed, I wonder that I am alive to-day."
 "As the old fellow listened to my story his eyes filled with tears. He walked up and putting his arm about me, said:
 "Young man, you were spared for some great purpose."—Atlanta Constitution.
