He came down from a long line of great men and gentlemen; no man in the country had a nobler ancestry; yet of his forefathers for a title of distinction, for none of them was nobler or worthier than he. The tribute to the Clevalier Bayard, that he was "without fear and without reproach," applied in all its force to him. There have been greater men in the public service than he, but there has been none purer-there has been no cleaner gentleman. Yet, speaking of greatnesss, it is comparative. As a Senator, he was, perhaps, the best informed man on the floor, and there is no record of a debate in which he did not sustain and take care of himself. He was in the Senate in the most trying period to a man of his polities.
