LETTER FROM ROME.

PROF. W. F. GILL WRITES INTERESTINGLY OF THE "ETERNAL CITY."

Things Seen and Heard by a Vance County Man Abroad—Impressions Made by One's First Visit to the Centre of Italian Art and Culture—Modern Ideas Amid Ancient Ruins and Relics—Foreign Railway Trains as Compared With Our Own American Palaces on Wheels.

My DEAR MR. MANNING—I do not promise myself or you to write anything that is new or so old a subject as the "Eternal City," yet the personal equation may lead an interest to the story for some of your readers. Were I to speak of the Rome that has been the object of most systematic "touring" during these summer days that are altogether too few, my letter would grow too rapidly and when the end was reached the old question cuibona, would stare me in the face, since a very few dollars would add the stamp of authority from the "Boschoni" companion-book of the thousands of Americans that are continually making their pilgrimage to this spot. The register kept at the Catacombs of St. Calixtus shows more than half the names of American travelers.

My count myself fortunate in having been forced to cross with an Italian steamship company, since from the moment I left the wharf I was in Italy and before I landed at Naples, 13 days later, I was an acclimated Italian. The voyage was uneventful in the extreme, yet the great pleasure of seeing Gibraltar for the first time, at the hour of sunset more than repaid me for the loss of the trip by the swifter boats of the Northern route. The coast hills of the two continents seemed to have tilted with one another and to stand in a natural gateway to the universe. Little wonder that old legend gave the spot the name "Pillars of Hercules." The exquisite sunset effect I shall not attempt to describe.

At the close of the first day on the Mediterranean, we landed in the beautiful bay of Naples. Instead of a low-lying coast city as I had always pictured this city, I found a natural amphitheatre of gigantic proportions lit from pit to gallery with electric lights, and the remains of the city that permit a landing after sunset, so we were compelled to make ourselves content until morning. The sunlight robbed the waters of the bay of some beauty, but not so with the city. A trade wind that blows from the city only made me impatient for the week I have promised myself at the close of the trip.

From Naples to Rome the road lies between two parallel ranges of the Apennines, with this summit and the sea level, the distance is the village. An Italian train standing in a station brings a smile to an American, accustomed to the vestibule Pullman cars, for it looks much like a collection of the rockaway coaches of the West coast, with an engine on wheels. But the smile fades as he realizes that, over a magnificent road bed without any crowding of passengers in the separate compartments, he is being carried with a speed that equals that of the same train in America. If there is a conductor, he is not seen on the trip, since there is no communication between carriages except from the outside. Four hours and a half brought my train from Naples to Rome, a distance of 165 or 170 miles.

Rome. How different from anything that I ever thought to see! A thoroughly modern railway station with every convenience for the traveling public. On the outside there stands a longer line of hotel omnibuses than was needed to accommodate the passengers, further still the ever present and vociferous cabbie while hither and thither crossed electric cars, caring as little for the incoming train as a fly for the incoming motor wonder still, there is no sign of the Rome of the times of Caesar and Cleopatra. Everything in sight speaks of today. Is it for this that I have come thousands of miles, to see the same city that might be visited at any time at the cost of one point as another? No, Rome differs from all other cities at just this point. She unites the old with the new, builds upon her past in a way that no other city can. Instead of hurrying to the hotel, to the corner and the street, she faces with a magnificent ruin of the imperial city. The Baths of Diocletian after more than 1,500 years of turmoil still stand to furnish homes for various enterprises. One large section, Michael Angelo transformed into the church of Santa Maria degli Angeli, with a Carthusian convent adjoined which is now the Museo Nazionale delle Terme Diocleziane. Another corner is now the church of San Bernardo. Among other occupants of this most extensive of Roman baths, with room for 8,000 bathers at one time, may be mentioned a hospital and a school for girls, while a wood and coal dealer with a turn for the classic, has entrenched himself under one of the arches. Thus it is that the Rome of today has woven into the fabric of her existence much of her past. Hence the charm of a visit here.

The drive to the Albergo della Minerva takes us away from the broad streets and public squares of the modern to the region of the old town. Contrary to the American

WHAT 'T WAS ABOUT.

THE CASE OF MR. FITZSIMMONS AND MR. JEFFRIES.

Causes That Led Up to the Recent Little Misunderstanding Between These Two Prominent Gentlemen Fully Explained—This in Deference to Numerous Requests from "Old Subscribers," "Anxious Enquirers," and "Fussy Citizens" to Know What the Row Was About—Peace Reigns and All's Well.

The Sun has received a large number of letters inquiring about Mr. Robert Fitzsimmons and Mr. James J. Jeffries were fighting about in San Francisco on Friday evening. There seems to be some misapprehension about the cause of the quarrel between the champion and the "noble old Roman," or the "grand old man," as Mr. Fitzsimmons is variously called by his ardent admirers. It seems that Mr. Jeffries publicly boasted that he was the greatest man in the world. This is the position which the "grand old man" has assumed to occupy, and he did not hesitate to say so. The claim so angered Mr. Jeffries that he determined to resent it by blurring the "grand old man" with one of his famous left hooks.

The "old-fashioned mother," Fannie E. McDonald in Sunny South. Yes, she was an old-fashioned mother. She was bent and wrinkled and gray. She had the hair of old time. The burden and heat of the day. Years ago she was fair and graceful. Her laugh her mother's laugh. And in the summer twilight Sweet lullabies she sang. Lay golden heads so small, While she dreamed of the future. Their love would repay her all.

Years passed on with their changes. The found that never another. Could take the place of that lost one. Like dear, old-fashioned mother. Her laugh her mother's laugh. Did they speak the words of praise That might have lightened the labor? "You're my mother-bosom."

Just Look at Her. Whence came that sprightly step, faultless skin, rich, rosy complexion, smiling face? She looks good as gold. Here she is, the old King's New Life Pills. Result, all organic active, digestion good, no headaches, no change for "blues." Try them on yourself. Only 25c. at M. Dorsey's drug store.

THE MENTOR OF THE PEOPLE. News and Observer. The usefulness of the newspaper is everywhere admitted. Its influence is felt and recognized as never before. The fashion has changed. Not a great while ago it was fashionable for preachers to rail at the press; now it is to be seen in the pulpit that the laity are to be taught the duties of citizenship. The latest tribute to the newspaper is by Archbishop Ireland. In a recent address before the Educational Association he said: "I am glad to see that the class room, for the general welfare of humanity, I should have devotion to truth prevail, I should name the newspaper. The newspaper is to-day pre-eminently the mentor of all classes."

YOUNG LADY'S LIFE SAVED. At Panama, Columbia, by Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Dr. Charles H. Uter, a prominent physician of Panama, Columbia, in a recent letter states: "Last March I had as a patient a young lady sixteen years of age, who had a very bad attack of dysentery. Everything I prescribed for her proved ineffectual and she was growing worse every hour. Her parents were sure she would die. She had become so weak that she could not turn over in bed. What to do at this critical moment was a study for me, but I thought of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and as a last resort prescribed it. The most wonderful result was effected. Within eight hours she was feeling much better; inside of three days she was upon her feet and at the end of one week was entirely well." For sale by M. Dorsey, druggist.

LEE'S SECRETARY

COL. CHARLES MARSHALL AND THE CONFEDERATE COMMANDER.

Some Military Incidents of an Amusing and Interesting Character Related by Gen. Bradley T. Johnson—A Story of Turkey and Rice—Pranks of the Young Officers—Some Times Played on the "Old Man"—Circumstances Under Which the Farewell Address of Gen. Lee Was Written. Baltimore Sun.

In an article in the June number of the Argyle, Lee Review, on the military career of the late Col. Chas. Marshall, of this city, Gen. Bradley T. Johnson relates many amusing and interesting incidents connected with Colonel Marshall's service as military secretary to General Robert E. Lee. The post of military secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, says General Johnson, is the most confidential place on the general staff, and after Lee all the orders and reports that went out from headquarters emanated from the pen and, as to the reports, from the brain of Charles Marshall. He wrote the report of the seven days' battle around Richmond, June 27th to July 4th, 1862, after an exhaustive study and compilation of the reports of corps, division and brigade commanders and many reports of colonels of regiments and captains of batteries and of maps of operations furnished by the topographical engineer.

Such work as this requires the strongest analytical intellect, together with the power of generalization and of bringing results together in graphic description, and the reports of the Army of Northern Virginia show these qualities in their highest developments. This was done, of course, under the rigid supervision of General Lee, whose taste required the most condensed style. Marshall would submit the draft of a report or order to the general for criticism or correction. The "Old Man" would say: "Strike out some of the adjectives, Colonel; save some for the next time," and out would go every word that could be spared, adjective or substantive, participle or pronoun.

Headquarters was ruled by a grave decorum that never relaxed. The "Old Man" never for a moment forgot himself. When he rode, he rode two horses length in front and the staff followed and the boys' life was not entirely a happy one. They got even sometimes, though. "I've been at headquarters when I found everyone in the sulks. The 'old man' had been sitting on some of them and they all resented it. Their great means of revenge was to keep his own letters from him. Taylor or Marshall would sift out the papers which flood an army headquarters and select some half a dozen and go to the general's tent and lay them on the general's table with the remark: 'General these require your attention.' The general would look longingly at the pockets of the young men being sent off to locate headquarters for the night. 'Are these the only ones for me, Colonel?' 'These are all, sir,' and off they would trudge to enjoy how they had got ahead of him.

One day I was over there and Marshall had just got a jug of applejack and was lying in the straw in a content with a tin cup between us discussing mathematics. Marshall had been professor of mathematics at some Western college and I had taken a good position in the mathematics department of the University of Virginia. Marshall had the applejack and the question under discussion that we did not hear a tap on the tent pole. At length the fly was drawn back and the general's head was pushed in. "Excuse me, gentlemen, for interrupting this interesting discussion, but I could not attract your attention so I am obliged to intrude." Of course everyone jumped to his feet, and says Marshall: "We were engaged in a very interesting mathematical question, sir." "Yes," said the general, "the unknown quantity, I suppose, with a glance at the jug and tin cup. Tableau!"

When Meade crossed the Rappahannock at Mine Run in the fall of 1862, the cavalry and General Lee rode down to see what was going on and whether it was a real movement or only a reconnaissance. As they rode the cavalry staff, ever alert to make themselves comfortable, were sent off to locate headquarters for the night. After satisfying themselves that Meade was going back the two generals rode together until at a point a courier stationed in the road turned them off to a line house in the distance. Arrived there they found Major Hawkins Lowndes, of Hampton's staff, in possession, with a fine fire in the only room and good stables for the horses.

After warming themselves—it was rough, raw weather—Gen. Hampton said to general, where are your quarters?" "Said Lee: "Indeed, I don't know. These were my headquarters last night and this morning when I left here, but these young gentlemen are so comfortable that it would be a pity to disturb them." Of course great protestation and excuse on Hampton's part. "We'll move at once." There was only one habitable room, with two beds, and it was ultimately arranged that the two generals should have the two beds and each keep a staff officer and that the rest should shift for themselves. So General Lee kept Marshall and General Hampton kept Lowndes, and the cavalrymen gave Marshall a fire and put him on the outside, next the door, so he had to be getting up all night to receive reports that were constantly coming in. Lowndes slept the sleep of the just, warm and long.
