When School Days Are Over.

Anent the commencement season Editor Johnson, of the Thomasville Charity and Children, preaches a short lay sermon to college graduates. As it will make good reading for anybody and everybody, we appropriate it and pass it along:

"Young ladies and gentlemen: The pomp and ceremony of commencement are over. The strenuous work of the school room is behind you. You have fought the sham battle and won. Now you must throw your blank cartridges wonderful advantages in your college future. You have the weapons in your hands but they are worthless unless you wield them. Did you ever bear of a college dead beat? Not long ago a graduate of Princeton was boasting in our presence that the carriculum at that great institution was so high that a man holding a diploma from any of our North Carolina colleges could not enter the junior class. And he was a graduate of Princeton. And he couldn't make a living for a jay bird! No matter about the utterly worthless for anything else. Do not fall back on your past record. Set your face like flint to the future. What are you going to do with yourself now? That is the question. Be careful that some awkward country boy who has never seen a college does not distance you in the real race of life. You have seen that many a time; so have we all, and that is why the unthinking sometimes discredit the value of a college course. The college is not to blame. It cannot furnish brains. It can never make a man out of a thing. It cannot convert a dude into a human being. Remember the fight has just begun. Be humble and patient and charitable. Do mate upon every company you enter. A lamp need not shout out on a dark night the fact that it is shining. Get right down to honest work my boy and girl. All these years you have been serving yourself; now begin your service for others. We have done. The sermon is over. Take it or throw it away, just as you like. Remember, though, that we are watching you, and that we love you, and that we hope you will not run out of North Carolina, but throw yourself into the glorious task of making the old State great and strong."

..... SHOULD GIVE CREDIT.

The Statesville Landmark, which like others, constantly finds matter taken from its columns in another paper published as original, or without proper credit being given, makes

We care little about the matter of credit, but we embrace this opportunity to say that many North Carolina papers boldly take not only news matter, but local and editorial matter, from the columns of other papers and pass it along as their own. Some of the daily papers steal local items from local papers and place them under a date line of the town from the Rev. J. H. Henderlite, pastor of which they came as if they were sent | the Presbyterian Church. The rooms in by a special correspondent; others appropriate news for which the local paper should have credit by saying "news has reached here," with no statement of how it "reached here," while still others steal brazenly without a word. This tendency to entirely and persistently ignore the paper from which the news comes is neither fair nor just. The Landmark isn't inclined to raise a disturbance about her maid of honor, Miss Bertha it but it sometimes feels that some of these persistent and brazen thieves ought to be exposed and some day we may be provoked into calling

Recuperative Power of Americans.

Christian Work and Evangelist.

If America has exhibited one quality more than another it is its recuperative power. Look at Chicago, when in 1871, 100,000 people were made homeless and property of the value of $200,000,000 was destroyed A year later Boston passed through a similar direful experience. Both cities swiftly recovered from the awful destruction and to-day the "burnt district" is only distinguishable from those which escaped the fire by its ada. The bride is the daughter of superior modern architecture. Nearly $300,000,0000 of property was wiped out in these cities within thirteen months. How wonderfully the municipalities immediately affected survived the shock is a matter of history. The big fire at Baltimore will result only in a more beautiful Baltimore. And then Galvestion. Precariously situated it met its fate in September, 1900, when 6,000 lives Their popularity is well attested by estimated value of $18,000,000, were destroyed, an appalling catastrophe for a city of that size, or of any size. A new city was immediately begun. The great seawall, intended to prevent a recurrence of the disaster, and the bustling and prosperous community which constitute the new Gai-American spirit in confronting a dis- paint couraging situation. Dr. Johnson said that the conflagration of a city, with all its "tumult of concomitant distress," is one of the most dreadful spectacles which the world can offer to human eyes. So it is. But it can scarcely be doubted that the same energy and courage and faith that rebuilt other stricken Americans cities will yet restore San Francisco, and testify to the undaunted courage and resourceful abilities of American Foreign Contributions Refused.

President Roosevelt declined to accept roffered gifts of $25,000 each from the lamburg-American and the North German Lloyd Steamship Companies to the earthquake and fire sufferers of San Francisco, on the ground that the United States are amply able to care for the unfortunates. This is doubtless true, but when we consider the fact that these two steamship companies maintain lines between America and Germany and do a great deal of business with Americans it seems out of order for the President to rule them out as foreigners. Another instance of the same kind is that of Sir Thomas Lipton, who doubtless sells a great deal of tea here. He offered $5,000. It is well enough to "put out the word" that we are amply able to care for our own, but quite another thing to turn down profered aid merely because it
