Kindness and Consideration.

Accomplishments That Should be Cultivated—So Easy to be Kind and it Means so much in Life's Social Amenities.

Some times when we see the unnecessary torture that a man or woman inflicts upon those dependent upon words of encouragement and kindness it seems as though the vein of cruelty must have very early in life been developed to a degree that accounts for its flourishing so vigorously in later years. Accused of cruelty these individuals would undoubtedly declare that the term was harsh and misleading, yet there is no other word that so perfectly defines their line of conduct.

Now does this indicate inherent degeneracy or is the outcome of lax training? In the majority of cases we are lead to believe that it is the result of the latter rather than the sequel of the former. Mothers, sweet, wellbred women, you will sit quietly by and watch their little boy or girl maul a kitten or puppy until its tortures scratches or bites its tormentor, this act being punished by the adult on-looker with a slap, which, as little as we believe in corporal punishment, should have been given to the child rather than its long suffering victim.

The years rolled by, the boy and girl no longer tease the kitten or the puppy, but they persistently annoy those weaker than themselves. They take delight in saying unkind things to those who have no redress and in opening up heart sores that were just beginning to heal. They do not mean to be cruel, but the something that impels them to pull the cat's ears or poke the puppy's eyes is dominant when they use the words that wound or the manner that hurts.

It is so easy to be kind—it means so little as an effort—so much as a factor in life's social amenities that the cultivation of kindness and consideration should be deemed as of as much importance in the education of children as those accomplishments to which so much thought is given and which really count for so little in the truest and best relations in life.

Chickens Come Home to Roost.

Raleigh Times.

This idiotic paragraph was incorporated in the platform of the democratic party adopted at the convention in Greensboro on July 3:

"We congratulate the people of the state that under democratic auspices there has been established through out the borders of the state a reign of law and liberty, peace and progress. That our people are no longer employed in guarding their homes and protecting their lives, liberty and property, as they were under republican rule, but safe in the protection of law, and enjoying the freedom which come from security of directing their energies to peaceful pursuits of honest industry."

Naturally, it was put there for effect, but high-sounding clap-trap is worthless. The chickens are coming home to roost—and they roost high on limbs where the lynchers let them. The paragraph was not complete. Some reference might have been made to the lynching of a white man in Washington. The question of whether he was democrat or a republican was of small moment. He was white. White men butchered him and white courts and white jurors practically excused and condoned the crime.

The Lyerly family was killed in cold blood at Barber Junction; under "democratic auspices" the three alleged murderers were lynched at Salisbury. "Under democratic auspices" the militia was called out with orders not to shoot—for fear that some good white citizen might be injured. A few hot bullets scattered through that mob of hoodlums might have saved the state the terrible disgrace of that shocking event—a few bullets might have shown that under "democratic auspices" "God Almighty reigns and the law is supreme."

This newspaper does not wish to be misunderstood. It stands on the democratic platform—now and always—but it takes no stock in this demagoguery set forth in the platform of the party. If our leaders claim to be responsible for law and order, so must they shoulder the responsibility of the happenings at Wadesboro and Salisbury. Surely, our party is in a deplorable condition if we seek to triumph always on this talk of a "reign of law and liberty." We can redeem ourselves, however, by hanging the lynchers.

Saw His Brother After Death.

A War Incident With Which the Late Major Robbins Was Connected—A Remarkable but True Story that is Vouched for.

Charlotte Observer.

Last week, in his speech at Cornelious, Col. Paul B. Means, of Concord, related the following story:

"At the battle of Seven Pines, on the 31st day of May, 1862, passing the grounds where some Federals had been camping on their outer lines, W. H. Robbins, a major of the Fourth Regiment, feeling some trepidation and dread on the eve of battle, and noticing a little piece of paper with writing on it, picked it up and found on it the words of the 7th verse of the 91st Psalm: 'A thousand shall fall at thy side and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee.' He often told his brother, Capt. F. C. Robbins, of Lexington, and others, that on reading those words all apprehension of danger left him and he went on into the battle with confidence that he would come out unharmed, which he did.

"Capt. Julius A. Robbins, a brother of Capt. W. M. Robbins and Capt. Frank C. Robbins, in Gen. John Gordon's command, and on an expedition up in Kentucky, to get a rest and remount horses, camped near Mt. Sterling on the night of June 7th, 1864. Just at daylight on the 8th, a large force of Federals came upon them from the rear and in their haste to form a line, Capt. Julius Robbins, however, as well as a few other officers, did get his men formed in line to resist the attack.

"As he mounted the fence which was in front of the line he called to his men in his last words, 'Boys don't let them run over us,' and instantly fell dead with a rifle ball through his brain. The Federals captured nearly the entire force, which was sent to Camp Delaware, where Capt. Frank Robbins was a prisoner at that time. Capt. Robbins talked with men of his brother's company who were at his side when he fell and they told him it was just at dawn of day, June 8th, 1864.

"That date Maj. W. M. Robbins, who knew nothing of Julius' death and who had been badly wounded in the battle of the Wilderness, May 6th, 1864, was at his father's, in Randolph county, and just at dawn of day of the morning of June 8th, 1864, as he waked up in sort of a startle, he saw Julius plain as he ever saw him in his life, and he heard him say, 'Mack, take care of my wife and children,' and then disappeared.

"Julius left surviving him a widow, a son and a daughter. The foregoing are facts. I have heard them often and have them in writing from Capt. Frank Robbins. Only those who know how the souls of the loved and departed ones can commune with us can understand and explain these facts, but there are those who know how to do this."

Plain Words to Negroes.

Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The leaders of the Niagara movement ought to have included to their address a recital of their detestation of the hideous crimes of the negro race, which make the race feared and hated wherever there is a lonely homestead in a negro community, and should have concluded with a solemn pledge to consecrate the intelligent men of the race to a persistent effort to eradicate the evil which is the prime source of the unreasoning prejudice against the negro.

When intelligent men like those in the Niagara movement show the intelligence to grapple with this question in behalf of the two races, their demands for other things will meet a respectful hearing which will astound them.—Philadelphia Ledger.

This advice from a northern newspaper may well be taken to heart by the better class of negroes in all sections. Southern newspapers generally are preaching a crusade against lynching, and they would be successful if the black brutes would cease with this crime. But, so long as they keep it up, white men will lynch them in spite of all the preaching, and it will be next to impossible to convict and punish the lynchers. The Times-Dispatch is opposed to lynching for any crime knowing, as it does, that lynching for one crime leads to lynching for other crimes, breeds contempt of law and the spirit of lawlessness, and makes a bad matter worse. But the majority of white men throw argument to the winds when brought face-to-face with this crime. They may give respectful hearing to the Governor of the State who pleads with them, but they will not give heed. So long as this crime is committed by negroes lynching will continue. These may not be pleasing facts, but they are facts and facts must be reckoned with.

What is the negro race going to do about it? The question is asked with all possible seriousness, for it is a question which concerns the whole negro race. Every such crime reflects in a measure upon the black race, and places every negro man, more or less, under suspicion. The most fiendish crime of this nature ever known in Virginia was committed by a negro janitor in the public school of Lynchburg, who had been reared under the best influences, who was highly esteemed by teachers and pupils, who enjoyed the implicit confidence of the superintendent. It is not meant to imply, of course, that all negro men are liable to commit this crime. Many of the noblest are far from it as white men. But when so many are guilty, how can the whites discriminate?

It is a terrible situation for the black race, and they must reckon with it. Once more we commend to the leaders of the negro race those who are gentle and who would lead their people to higher things, the advice of the Philadelphia Ledger. Instead of passing resolutions condemning lynchings, let them address themselves to the cause of it, and make an earnest and persistent effort to eradicate it. It should be the prevailing topic of sermons, of lectures, and all manner of discourses by negro speakers; and teachers of negro boys should hammer into their pupils day after day, the enormity of this crime. By these means, and by all possible means, the respectable negroes should make a crusade against the infamy, and endeavor with the help of God and the help of the law to stamp it out. If they succeed, lynching will cease, if the practice is continued, not only will lynching continue, but the very existence of the negro race will be in jeopardy.

Curs and Sheep.

Wilmington Messenger.

"The finish of the dog, or at least a majority of his tribe, is looming in sight, and some of these days there will be a legislative hold order to curtail the canine's liberties. A movement has started among farmers of Mecklenburg county and sportsmen of Charlotte to make a determined effort to have the next legislature enact a dog tax law for that county. Every other county in the state should join this movement.—Exchange.

Yes, sooner or later the liberties of canines throughout the entire county of Mecklenburg, and we trust the state will be curtailed.—Charlotte News.

"The News is right in one respect, but wrong in another. We do not believe the legislature can be counted on to put a tax on dogs which would rid the country of the horde of worthless curs which infest certain sections of the state where they prevent the raising of sheep. Our legislators are afraid to tackle this question, but with anything like the backbone of an eel. If we want to get rid of the curs which infest the sheep growing sections of the State we must take the law into our own hands. The sheep raisers need not depend on the legislature to give them relief. Their only hope is in a general crusade against the curs in which they curtail those pestilential canines by curbing their tails with an axe close behind the ears. That is the only remedy we know which will effectively stop the ravages of the worthless dog of the worthless tenant in sheep dogs among the sheep. The sheep raisers need not look to the legislature for protection. They have tried that time and again to their disappointment. They should know by this time that the sheep killing dog of the worthless tenant is of greater value to the politician seeking votes than the whole flock of sheep of the landowner. The man with half a dozen worthless curs has as much power at the polls and often many more sympathizers than the landowner with no dog, but a valuable flock of sheep. And thus it goes with the politician; he is for the man who can control the greatest number of votes, so the landowner has to give way to his tenants."

When two strong men come to blows, even if they are well matched, it is not a pleasing sight, but if the man who gets the worst of it will look better and feel better in short order. Be sure you get Dr. Witt's. Good for everything a salve is used for, including piles. Sold at Parker's Two Drug Stores.

Possibilities of the South.

Baltimore Manufacturers' Record.

Coal and iron, the foundations of the world's chief industries, the basis of the vast wealth of Great Britain, Germany and Pennsylvania, the moving forces of civilization, are found in the South in quantity, proximity and cheapness of production on a scale not elsewhere duplicated in the world. Of coal the South has nearly three times as much in area and many times as much in quantity as Great Britain, Germany and Pennsylvania combined. Of iron ore the South has certainly one-half of all the known ore of the entire country. Measure if you can the limitless possibilities, the vast wealth of the future of this section.

When a man deliberately kills his sick and helpless wife and then ghosts over the deed, we think that he should be given a speedy trial and hanged soon as possible. That's the punishment he deserves, and the Supreme Court should not interfere.—Durham Sun.
