Baltimore Evening Sun.

It now appears that the next United States Senate will have a Republican majority of 10 votes. Six of those 10, and probably more, will be insurgents committed to the doctrine of piecemeal revision of the tariff. Their votes, added to the solid Democratic vote, can carry any measure that comes before the Senate. In these circumstances it is quite probable that we shall shortly learn just what insurgency is. We shall find out whether it is a thing of principle or of policy. We shall find out wheeher the men who have made brave professions, are ready to live up to those professions. And, inasmuch as the solid Democratic vote will be required to pass any tariff legislation that may be proposed, we may also learn a thing or two about some of the members of that party. A protection Democrat is not a pleasing sight. Altogether the revelations of the opening session of the new Congress ought it be interesting.
