In Use For Over Thirty Years

CASTORIA

THE GENUINE COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

General Lee did not abandon hope of successfully extricating himself from the dilemma. The army had been in straits almost as deplorable. The march was continued during April 8, with little interruption from the enemy. In the evening we halted near Appomattox Courthouse, General Lee intending to march by way of Campbell Courthouse, through Pittsylvania county, toward Danville, with a view of opening communications with the army of General Joseph E. Johnston, then retreating before General Sherman through North Carolina. General Lee's purpose was to unite with General Johnston to his aid in resisting Grant, whichever might be found best. The exhausted troops were halted for rest near Appomattox Courthouse, and the march was resumed at 1 o'clock A. M. I can convey a good idea of the condition of affairs by telling my own experience.

A Night in the Woods.
When the army halted General Lee and staff turned out of the road into a dense wood to receive some rest. Lee had a conference with some of the principal officers, at which it was determined to force our way the next morning with the troops under General Fitzhugh Lee, the command of Longstreet bringing up the rear. With my comrades of the staff and staff officers of Generals Longstreet and Gordon I sought a little rest.

We lay upon the ground with our saddles for pillows, our horses picketed nearby eating the bark of trees for want of better provender, and our faces covered with the capes of our overcoats to keep out the night air. Soon after 1 o'clock A. M. I was aroused by the sound of a column of infantry, marching along the road. At first I thought they were the federal soldiers.

I raised my head and listened intently. My doubts were quickly dispelled. It was Hood's old Texas brigade, and I recognized the command by hearing one of them repeat the version of a passage of scripture with which I was familiar—I mean with the Texas version: "The race is not to them that's got the longest legs to run; Nor the battle to that people; That shoots the biggest gun." Soon after they passed we were all astride our bivouac was at an end. We made our simple toilet, consisting of putting on our caps and saddling our horses. Somebody had a little cornmeal and somebody had a tin can such as is used to hold water for shaving. A fire was kindled and each man in his turn, according to rank and seniority, made a can of oatmeal gruel and was allowed to keep the can until the gruel became cool enough to drink. General Lee, who reposed as we had done, not far from us, did not; as I remember, have even such refreshments as I have described.

Last Meal in Confederate States.
This was our last meal in the Confederacy. Our next was taken in the United States and consisted mainly of a generous portion of that noble American animal whose strained relations with the chancellor of the German empire made it necessary at last for the president of the United States to send an Ohio man to the court of Berlin.

"Santas componere lites."
As soon as we all had our turn at the shaving can we rode toward Appomattox Courthouse, when the sound of guns announced that Gordon had already begun the attempt to open the way.

He forced his way through the cavalry of the enemy only to encounter a force of infantry far superior to his own and starvation command. He informed General

Lee that it was impossible to advance further, and it became evident that the end was at hand.

General Lee had written Grant stating that he would meet him at 10 o'clock on the morning of April 9 on the old stage road to Richmond. Attended by myself and one orderly, Lee proceeded down this road to meet General Grant.

As we advanced through the rear guard, composed of the remnants of Longstreet's corps, the men cheered their chieftain as he passed. Their confidence and enthusiasm was not one whit abated by defeat, hunger and danger. It was lucky for the secretary of the treasury that this rear guard was not permitted to try its hand at increasing the pension roll with which he is now struggling. These men made no fraudulent pensioner. When they were done with a man he or his representative had an indisputable claim to a pension under any kind of a pension law.

General Lee, with an orderly in front bearing a flag of truce, had proceeded but a short distance after passing through our rear guard when he became upon the advancing enemy. I rode forward to meet a federal officer, who turned out to be Lieutenant Colonel Whittier of General Humphrey's staff, and who delivered to me General Grant's reply to General Lee's letter, declining to discuss terms of a general pacification. I took this letter to General Lee, who at once dictated to me a letter to Grant asking an interview for the purpose of discussing terms of surrender. Colonel Whittier took this letter to Grant.

General Lee then returned to the front, and with General Longstreet proceeded to a small orchard, and there waited for Grant's reply. As he was much fatigued a rude couch was prepared under an apple tree, upon which he reclined until the appearance of a flag of truce and Grant's affirmative reply.

Where the Meeting Was Held.
Colonel Babcock, who brought the reply, told General Lee that he had been sent to make any arrangements for the meeting that General Lee desired within the federal or Confederate lines.

General Lee directed me to accompany him with an orderly, and immediately mounting his horse rode with Colonel Babcock toward Appomattox Courthouse.

We passed through an infantry force in front of the village, and General Lee directed me to find a suitable place for the meeting. I rode forward and asked the first citizen I met to direct me to a house suitable for that purpose. I learned afterward that the citizen was Mr. McLean, who had lived on the battlefield of Bull Run, but had removed to Appomattox Courthouse to get out of the way of the war. McLean conducted me to an uncaptured and unfortified house in a very bad state of repair. I told him that it was not suitable, and then he offered his own house, to which he conducted me.

I found a room suitable for the purpose in view and sent back the orderly who had accompanied me to direct General Lee and Colonel Babcock to the house.

They came in presently and Col. Babcock said that as General Grant was approaching on the road in front of the house it would only be necessary for him to leave an orderly to direct him to the place of meeting.

General Lee, Colonel Babcock and myself sat in the parlor for about half an hour when a large party of mounted men arrived, and in a few minutes General Grant came into the room, accompanied by his staff and a number of federal officers of rank, among whom were General Ord and General Sheridan.

General Grant greeted General Lee very civilly, and they engaged in a conversation for a short time about their former acquaintance during the Mexican war.

Some other federal officers took part in the conversation which was terminated by General Lee saying to General Grant that he had come to discuss the terms of the surrender of his army, as indicated in his note of that morning, and he suggested to General Grant to reduce his proposition to writing.

General Grant assented and Colonel Parker of his staff moved a small table from the opposite side of the room and placed it by General Grant, who sat facing General Lee.

When General Grant had written his letter in pencil he took it to General Lee, who remained seated. General Lee read the letter and called General Grant's attention to the fact that he required the surrender of the cavalry, as if they were public horses. He told General Grant that Confederate cavalrymen owned their horses, and they would need them for planting a spring crop. General Grant at once accepted the suggestion.

Drawing Up the Articles.
The terms of the letter having been agreed to General Grant directed Colonel Parker to make a copy of it in ink, and General Lee directed me to write its acceptance.

Colonel Parker took the table upon which General Grant had been writing to the other side of the room, and I accompanied him, and after he had finished copying the letter I sat down at the same table and wrote General Lee's acceptance.

When General Grant had signed the copy of his letter made by Colonel Parker, and General Lee had signed the answer, Colonel Parker handed to me General Grant's letter and I handed to him General Lee's reply and the work was done.

When General Lee returned to his lines a large number of men gathered around him, to whom he announced what had taken place and the causes that had ended the struggle. Even in the rush, roar and rattle of battle he was cool and collected, and gave his orders in a quiet tone of voice.

CAPT. HAMBLEY OF SALISBURY IS DEAD

Prominent Citizen of Salisbury Died this Morning. Was Vice President and General Manager of the Whitney Development Company.

Salisbury, Aug. 13.—The city was shocked this morning to learn of the death of Capt. E. B. C. Hambley, which occurred at 3 o'clock this morning at his palatial mansion on South Fulton street. Capt. Hambley had been quite sick for several weeks with typhoid and his friends were gratified last week at the marked improvement in his condition, but a change for the worse came Saturday.

Capt. Hambley leaves a wife and one and a little daughter. His wife was Miss Lottie Coleman, of Rockwell, this county.

Capt. Hambley was vice-president and general manager of the Whitney Development Company and had his general offices in this city.

He was born in England and he came to this country in 1881, and engaged in gold mining, located in Rowan and had spent the greater portion of his time here. His home was one of the finest in the South and he entertained his friends royally.

In a recent write-up of the Whitney Development Company and of the development on the Yadkin, the Salisbury Post had the following to say of Capt. Hambley:

"The possibilities for a large development of the water-powers at the falls of the Yadkin have long been recognized by engineers and promoters both north and south. In 1881, Mr. E. B. C. Hambley, a young English engineer who had seen service in India and South Africa, was sent to North Carolina to take charge of several gold mines owned by English clients. He remained here, married and identified himself with many important Southern enterprises, taking up his home in this city and eventually taking a deep interest in the possibilities of the water-power development on the Yadkin. He was the first man to take hold of this great water-power proposition and is one of the immediate associates of the Whitney-Stevenson Company in their operations in connection with the Yadkin water-power development. Mr. Hambley commands the confidence of investors on account of his spendid judgment and business acumen and represents a capital of more than $10,000,000. He is keenly alive to the South's commercial interests and much impressed with the necessity for the introduction of proper labor into the South."

UNION PRINTERS' MEETING.

Convention Being Held at Colorado Springs—Three Hundred Delegates Present.

Colorado Springs, Aug. 13.—The fifty-second Annual convention of the International Typographical Union opened their meeting this morning with three hundred delegates representing forty-six thousand printers. The chief event of the day was the formal presentation of the books of Amos Cummings library at the Union Printers' Home.

The chief business before the convention which will continue all the week is the consideration of plans for further carrying on the fight of the Union for the eight-hour day. The organization has expended $500,000 in conducting this fight. The convention also affords the representatives of all unions of the international organization an opportunity to inspect the building and the work of the union home, which has been maintained here for the past thirteen years.

Excursions to Cripple Creek and other points of interest in the Pike's Peak region will be important features of the week.

MR. BRYAN'S STATEMENT.

Gives Out Statement as to Matter of Withdrawal of Sullivan.

Paris, Aug. 13.—Mr. Bryan gave out a statement concerning the controversy respecting the Illinois Democratic National Committee. The controversy had grown out of Bryan's letter demanding the resignation of National Committee member Sullivan to which demand Sullivan returned a prompt refusal and stated that Mr. Bryan had been misinformed respecting the situation.

Mr. Bryan's rejoinder says no one but himself is responsible for the information contained in his letter. Mr. Bryan added: "I entered into this contest because I believed Roger Sullivan and John Hopkins had deliberately robbed the Democrats of Illinois of their political rights and I still believe so. To secure political power by force or fraud ought to be as disgraceful in the eyes of the public as to secure money by force and fraud. I cannot conceive of any plausible defense which Sullivan can make for remaining in the National Committee."

"If a body is unable to rid itself of the leadership of men like Sullivan who seek to control the party organization in order to advance their corporate interests, it might as well dissolve. While I was anxious to give Sullivan a chance to retire without a fight it is probably just as well that he refused for if we must fight to purify the party organization the sooner it begins the better."
