A PIONEER OF THE AIR.

"My business is flying, no teaching," said Wilbur Wrigh when they offered him the chai of aeronautics in the College of France, after having decorate him with the Legion of Honor.

Wright was the greatest bird man of the age-a pioneer of the air. He died the other day in his quiet little home in Dayton, Ohio, a victim to the needles disease of typhoid fever. He and his brother Orville developed the heavier than air flying machine. They were quiet, modest men, and did not seem to realize that they had attained to the front rank of 20th century scientists. Perhaps their failure to blow their own horn is the reason Americans have not yet realized the fact.

Our old boss man on the Charlotte Odserver, J. P. Cald well, had an unfailing faith in the eventual success of the flying machine. He had a lot of fun in his defence of flying with the skeptics of his day, but he was always serious in his faith in the conquest of the air ever when discussing it in a vein of levity and frolicsomeness. He lived to see the day when the pioneer masters of the science, the Wright boys, chose the unfrequented sand dunes of Kitty Hawk on the North Carolina coast for the trying out of their latest models. There less than half a year ago Wilbur carried

A FARMER FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

It was a piece of good judgment, as well as an act of justice, in the Democratic State Convention to put a farmer in so prominent a place on the ticket as Lieutenant Governor. Mr. Daughtridge, of Edgecombe, was virtually a beaten man, after the second ballot, but for Catawba and Burke. Both were t wards the head of the alphabet of the counties, and when, cn the third ballot, Burke flung him 9 and Catawba 13-their solid votes--his stock rose, and other counties began to fall in line. W. J. Shuford and W. A. Self seemed to be the leaders in the Catawba delegation, and W, C. Ervin and A. C. Avery, Jr., in the Burke delegation, in working for the former candidate. Daughtridge quickly saw where his friends were and came over to where the Catawba and Burke placards were, remaining here till the end of the balloting. He made a very neat speech of thanks for the honor, showing that a farmer can talk as well as plow. He is a giant physically, a man of fine presence and will no doubt be just as able to pull the bell cord over a bunch of guarreling Normal and Industrial College lawyers in the State Senate a over a pair of mules on his Edgecomb plantation. from which he has supported his family of seven children.
