CONVERTING THE GERMAN PEOPLE

Of no small significance is the call for immediate political reform which is signed by so many distinguished Germans of moderate or even conservative views. The list includes Prof. Delbrueck, who has been one of Germany's ablest spokesmen; Dr. Paul Rohrbach, an authority on world politics; Dr. Adolph von Harnack, an eminent theologian, and other writers whose vigorous defense of the Cerman cause the American public is familiar. They are as little to be put with the pacifists as with the pan-Germans who demand for Germany the earth and the fullness thereof. Most of them have been accounted supporters of the moderate policies for which Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg was supposed to stand till he put his position in doubt by going over to the advocates of February 1 of unrestricted submarine warfare. They now break with the government by demanding that increased power be given to the German people—not after the war, as the kaiser and his chancellor propose, but now. And in their appeal they make plain their fear that if reforms are not granted during the emergency they will not be granted at all. These are for the most part learned men. They know perfectly how the German people have again and again been tricked by unscrupulous Hohenzollern princes, and also the apologies made for this treachery by bootlicking Prussian historians. Their fear, evoked by the violent outbreak of reaction in Prussia at the first hint of reform, is that the people are to be fooled again in the familiar Prussian fashion: Today such doubt is intolerable. To keep that faith with the German people to which it is entitled it is needful to take this work in hand without further delay. In this they have taken a stand with not merely the minority socialists, but with the Scheidemann group, which stood with the chancellor in support of deferring reforms until the Stockholm conference convinced them that distrust of the German government was a fatal obstacle to peace. The Catholic center, which last year threw its weight on the chancellor's side, has not yet spoken on the new situation. If that should add its support to the moderates and the social democrats, Germany would be sharply divided into two groups, leaving no middle party to turn the balance of power toward the policy of procrastination.

It is of great importance that this demand for reform has grown in proportion as the prospects for German victory receded. Whenever a triumphant peace has seemed near reform has been pressed only by the more radical socialists. When it was promised that the U-boats would end the war in three months even Vorwaerts thought less of reform than of victory. While hope of a separate peace with Russia was entertained all thought centered on that. It has been illuminating to watch democracy rise in Germany as the military barometer has gone down. Herr Schiedemann came back from Stockholm with a report which amounted to a notification that the only way to convert Germany to democracy was to defeat its armies. For confirmation of his perhaps unintended disclosure we have not only the signed appeal of eminent Germans, but the suppression of various newspapers, so far as political comment is concerned, which have in the past supported the chancellor. What they would say if left free may be gauged by the vigorous utterances, a few days ago, of well-known writers like Georg Bernhard and Theodor Wolff, the latter of whom warned Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg that if he could not either announce peace terms or promise immediate reforms he had better hold his tongue. It is impossible not to connect this new demand for freedom with the failure of the U-boats, the growing strength of the British, the decision of Russia to continue the war and the complete or partial belligerency of the United States, Brazil and other countries as a direct result of the policy of frightfulness to which the chancellor gave his adhesion last February. Even at home the German government is getting found out. In the Vossische Zeitung Herr Bernhard broadly intimates that its trickery was the direct cause of the vigor with which the United States entered the war, and that the German people had been deceived in regard to the actual situation. If disillusioned in such a matter the nation may lose faith in the government, both as to the origin of the war and as to its outcome. After five months the U-boats have not won the war, and doubt increases as to whether they can win it. Russia's recovery has dashed hopes of a swift victory, while the powerful aid of the United States gives the entente an increased advantage in a long war.

The moral is plain, and it should be equally obvious to pacifists and to the ferocious Catos who demand the destruction of Germany. Two things hold Germany together in support of kaiserism—fear and hope of conquest. Either will turn the scale against reform. No kind words will loosen the grip of military autocracy till the pan-German power is shattered. Revolution came to Russia only through defeat, and reform can come to Germany only in the same drastic fashion. Let the war end with Germany gripping its plunder and its war lords would take good care to create such a situation as would give a plausible excuse for deferring promised reforms. The Hohenzollern autocracy, in short, will have to be hammered till it lets go of stolen goods and gives political power to the German people.—Springfield Republican.

ANTI-JAPANESE FEELING NOT STRONG IN U. S.

By the Associated Press. Tokio, July 10.—That the anti-Japanese sentiment in the United States is not so strong as is believed in Japan is the opinion of Dr. Waichiro Okada, professor of medicine at the Imperial University, who recently returned from a trip to America. The professor said that the Japanese were welcome in the United States, generally speaking.

It was true that among the labor element in the west the situation was different, but he found that the majority of the American people do not subscribe to the anti-Japanese agitation in western states. He added that some of the American physicians were even suggesting medical cooperation between Americans and Japanese because Americans were recognizing that the Japanese possessed certain excellent qualities in medical science.

GERMAN NEWSPAPERS AGAIN ATTACK MERCIER

By the Associated Press. Amsterdam, July 10.—Cardinal Mercier is again being violently attacked in the German newspapers, because, it is alleged, he recently wrote a pastoral letter stating that criminally violated right must be restored, the guilty severely punished, and the renewal of such crimes made impossible.
