HEELS AND HEALTH

That women can wear low heels and retain their health and yet be sty-lish is something they rarely dreamed of, and yet, it is said, this is dame fashion's latest order. Some women are yet a little slow to believe that they can wear a shoe that is comfortable, one that will fit their foot, and be in style, but the majority on women are heartily welcoming fashion's latest decree, and are discarding the "outlandish" high heel, they say, for one more comfortable and many times more sensible.

North Carolina women, however are not required to adopt this style while the women of Illinois are or have been dangerously near being compelled to wear low heels whether hey like them or not. Recently a oill was passed in the lower house in Springfield, which if it shall be susained, will compel women to wear neels not more than one and threeights inches in height.

As to who should have credit for his change of footwear, the womn would like to know. They say that it is not likely that the shoemakers started it for they have never made shoes for women to fit their feet. Some say that Uncle Sam is esponsible because he required his boys to wear correct shoes and has shown people that a shoe can be made both good looking and to fit the feet at the same time. This reason probably accounts for the new low neel shoe for women being built omewhat on military lines. But physicians and health workers yould like to believe that people in general are paying more attention to natters that so vitally affect their health and well being as the ill-favored heel. They want to believe that women have reached the point that they will demand and wear what is best for their health in spite of what is said to be the style.

GARDEN FOR EVERY

Raleigh, Sept. 17 .- The city of Raleigh has planned to make itself a model for the cities and towns of North Carolina in the matter of gardens, having taken as a motto: "A garden for every home 12 months in he year." For the accomplishment of its purposes, two treined women have been inployed as garden supervivors, and a course in elementary griculture has been introduced in ne city schools.

The chamber of commerce, through s food committee, has been promotng this plan, and has distributed, brough the cooperation of Boy Scouts, a garden schedule for the fall nonths, a copy of this schedule being placed in each of the 4,100 homes in

A Chautaugua is one of the most dees are urging utilization of fall and large assembly gathered at Claremont winter gardens, but so far as is College last June, beneath the spa-known no other city has taken such cious tent, amidst the beautiful grove well directed, systematic and effector of the campus, it was an inspiring tive steps in this direction as has the sight. It is fine to see so many people gather for entertainment of such high-order. It gives one confidence that what the people really want is something worth while, elevating, a form of public amusement that ap-Raleigh, Sept. 17.—Information has peals to the intellect and lingers in the memory. For an enterprise like administrator from Washington to that to succeed in a town is a splenthe effect that the cotton-seed crushing and refining industry will, in all probability, be placed under regulations similar in semilar in semi tions similar in some measures to business men, such magnificent schools such fine streets and public improvemanagement, such a social world, it is almost a necessity that we have a chautauqua to cap the climax of the town's progressiveness, and to further the social interests as well as the educational advancement of the community. As soon as the gar industry, that licensing must in-evitably tend to the elimination of Chautauqua was closed last summer, a movement was put on foot to have another next summer. Though no great effort has been made, over 60 have signed the contract for a seven day chautauqua next year, that will be worth $14,00. The plan is to secure 100 names or guarantors who will pledge themselves to take equal responsibility for the 700 tickets, so as to induce the Swarthmore Company to put the course on here next summer. Only 40 more names must be secured, which with the response already made, ought to be an easy matter. The company was very liberal last year. 'As it was their first offert here they made the guarantee effort here they made the guarantee only $360, ro ten men pledging $10 apiece. The company lost money apiece. The company lost money then, for their receipts were about $855, including guarantee, sale of tickets, and gate receipts, and their expenses were anywhere from $1,-400 to $2,000. We have no right to ask them to repeat such an expensive benevolence, for we are not paupers. Hickory can pay for what she wants, and has done it always. And she does want a chautauqua just as she wants a fair in the fall, which will cost more than a chautauqua and certainly is worth as much qua and certainly is worth as much to the mental and recreational life as the fair is to the business life of

Other towns have already agreed to finance the chautauqua, some of them smaller than ours, and most of them far less progressive. If these towns, are so anxious for the social and intellectual life of their people with fewer advantaves than we, how much more need we to be concerned, with our schools, our colleges, our factories, our bustling commerce. and the greater need to keep our peo-ple evenly balanced, with a chance for
