A HAPPY NEW YEAR

When a new year dawns it is instinctive for men and women to pause and consider the one that has just passed into history, especially in their personal and individual relation to it. They compare it with the previous years and ask themselves the question "Was it better or worse?" And, of course, they are even more interested in the question of what the new year will have in store for thema question unanswerable. But, while we cannot tell what one of these new days will bring forth, we can study our shortcomings and mistakes in the past and resolve to pro-fit by them. This kind of New Year introspection is very good employ-ment for the twilight hours between the old year and the new. The past is gone and irrevocable; we cannot change it, but we can make its lessons serve the future, since it is man's priceless privilege to make his life what he will, spirtually and in its influence on others.

The lower animals live unto them. selves alone. The satisfaction of their personal needs and desires is their sole end and aim in life. Man, being endowed with an immortal soul, is destined to perform a higher and greater part than the mere satisfaction of his bodily desires, and to the dethat man realizes this great gree truth and acts upon his knowledge of it, depends the real success or failure of an individual's life.

It is pitifully true that many persons never fully grasp the great truth that the most satisfactory joy of living is found in service, and it is these blind seekers of selfish gratification who after all, get the least out of life. When we learn the lesson that to serve others is to promote our own happiness we are on the high road to a successful career, however humble may be our sphere in life. Our service need not be of a brilliant order, nor affect directly a large number of people, it may, indeed, be a very small and inconspicuous part that we play on life's stage, yet none of us lives in so circumscribed an area that we cannot do something for somebody. somebody. If we take unselfish service as our standard of citizenship and fellowship, in the home circle, among our neighbors, in community affeirs and in all our relations with the world, we shall do our part to make 1922 a happy new year for others, and in doing this will unquestionably make it a happy one for us.

Mr. N. C. English is relating a new boil weevil story. "Two darkeys," he said, "were riding down a country road in a hipt price? car when a large bool weevil waved for them to ston. "T want to buy this car," said the boil weevil when the car came to a halt. "I't's not for sale," replied the driver. "T've got plenty of money," persisted hig price." About this time another large boll weevil appeared on the scene. "Let me buy it," urged the newcomer, "T've got all kinds of money.", the blurted, "you can't drive a car." "Cant we, re-ioined the weevil, "divide a trans." Sole; J. A. Tuplett D. S. 300; 223-Beam vs. Sabridge, C. H. and V. Stanbridge, S. J. Nogle, H. A. Jonis P. W. 52:00; 223-Beam vs. Sole; J. A. and Halstead, and survived them all. He was a picturesque link between old times and new. He had been an active figure in and keen observer of American and world history for nearly three quarters of a century, for he began journalistic and political activity in his teens and lived to celebrate his eighty-first birthday. "Marse Henry,' as he will be affectionately remembered by multitudes, was a brilliant and sometimes caustic writer, with strong convictions, loyal personal affections and undisguised dislikes, but he made no pretensions of infallibility, and because he did not approve of a man or a measure would be the last to contend that that man or measure was un-worthy of public confidence. Perhaps the greatest of Henry Watterson's many achievements was the happy ex-ertion of his influence in healing the scars of sectional strife. Himself a veteran of the war between the North and the South he bore no ill will to the victors and was an important factor in promoting a better understanding and a full measure of reconciliation between the sections. Peace to his ash-

They call it disarmament whether the ratio be 19-10-7 or 5-5-3, but sure-enough disarmament would be 0-0-0.

with some impatience that the General when the woman said that war was going to be made impossible, told her not to run away with that notion. Of course war will not be impossible until human nature has all been turned into something different from what most of it is now until there is no more aggression to justify whatever of resistance is necessary to meet and overcome it.

The ideal of the pacifists is admira-ble; their contention that it already has been attained is the height of absurdity, and a most harmful absurdity at that.
