Our critics are not always arguing about the relative merits of American and French and Russian novels. They take books impartially, They enjoy many American novels, and do not re quire them to be written in London English; they enjoy or pretend to enjoy Russian and Spanish and Italian books in translations, and many of them know quite a fair amount of French And when they are suddenly rated in a professional manner by an otherwise amiable and intelligent person for not always comparing their own novelists untavorably with the latest realist from Russia. or Spain, or the Fiji Islands, they merely rub their eyes, and wonder what the dear good man is exciting himself about .- London Exchange
