A Pitiable Case.

A young man was arrested here ast Tuesday and to secure his attendance during the term of the court his father made a mortgage possession—to indemnify a gentleman who went on his bond. The next day when the case was called his son had absented himself, and perhaps was far on his way toward the South Carolina line. When he was called out, the old man, stooped with age, immediately and voluntarily delivered the mule to his bond +-

It excited our deepest sympathy thus to see the old man deprived of almost his only earthly possession and means of making a crop and sustaining himself. The ingratitude of the son was in striking contrast to the manly manner in which the father met his responsibility.

The time has passed when a merchant can sit down at home and order his stock of goods or have a New York agent, who has neither seen his town nor knows the needs and faucies of his customers, to buy his goods for him. A merchant who keeps posted and up with the times is forced to go at least once each season to the Northern markets, as there are a great many novelties come out each season that are impossible to order or see by sample. We will now TALK TO YOU about Millinery. We will deal in plain statements as we have neither time nor space for sensational matter.

Ourtrade in millinery has increass ed to such an extent that we have just added another room to our store, devoted entirely to millinery. To show you that we carry the stock and sell it at the right price, we sold last season over 400 trimmed hats and bonnets at wholesale, and that was nothing compared to our retail trade.
