"We shall see,"

Enus lay perfectly calm outwardy, while Dr. Clyde paced the deck back and forth, with his arms folded across his broad chest, and the shadow had deepened in those dark eyes, since the evening his sister had sounded their depths, but there was no other token of the light which had been quenched.

Soon the boat had stopped, then came the sound of a footstep both those waiting women knew so well; then the loved voice: "God bless you, Clinton, you are more than welcome." Mrs. Trevis was in the doorway, and Enna raised hersell to see her clasped in her father's arms. The words; "Ellen, dear wife, have you brought my child ?" was answered by a look, and she child, that had at last found rest-
