All are invited to attend and bring well filled baskets.—Advertisement. So in renewing their efforts to save the country from destruction, the Populists have instituted a series of picnics, which are enhanced by an abundance of good food seasoned with starvation oratory. Thus after eating his picnic dinner, the festive Populist sits with stomach distended almost to bursting and listens, with blanched cheek and streaming eye, to the eloquence of famine and discontent, as it is dealt out by a broken down country doctor. Whatever else the North Carolina Populist may have, he is lamentably deficient in his sense of the ridiculous.—North Carolinian. Recent Improvements in the University of North Carolina. 1.
