Stretching Things.

"I'm almost dead! It is as hot as fire, and I've been more than a dozen miles after that colt!"
Andrew threw himself at full length on the lounge, and wiped the perspiration from his forehead.
"Where did you go?" inquired his father.

"I went over to Briggs' corner and back by the bridge."
"That is a little less than a mile and a half. Is it so very warm, Andy? I am sure quite cool here."
"No, not so dreadful, I suppose, if I'd take it moderate; but I ran like lightning, and got heated up."
"You started about 5 o'clock, my son, and it now lacks a quarter of 6," said his father, consulting his watch.

"Yes sir; just three quarters of an hour," answered Andrew, innocently.
"Does it take lightning three-quarters of an hour to go a mile and a half?"
"I didn't mean exactly that, father, but I ran all the way, because I expected the whole town would be here to-night to see my new velocipede," explained Andrew, reluctantly.

"Whom did you expect, Andy? I wasn't aware that such a crowd was to be here. What will you do with them all?"
"Jim, Eddie, and Tom told me they'd be round after school; and I wouldn't wonder if Ike came, too; that's all."
"The population of the town is five thousand, and you expect three persons. Well, as you are very sick, I am glad no more are coming. You couldn't play with them at all."

"Sick!" cried Andrew, springing to his feet, "who says I'm sick?"
"Why, Andrew, you said you were almost dead. Doesn't that mean you're sick?"

"You are a particular, father, about my talking. I don't mean exactly what I say, of course. I wasn't nearly dead, to be sure; but I did some tall running, you bet. There were more than fifty dogs after me, and I don't go much on dogs."

"Quite a band of them! Where did they all come from?"
"There were Mr. Wheeler's sheep dog, and Robb's store dog, and two or three more; and they made for me, and so I ran as fast as I could."

"Five, at the most, are not fifty, Andrew."
"There looked to be fifty, anyway," answered Andrew, somewhat impatiently. "Carter's ten-acre lot was full of dogs just making for me; and I guess you'd have thought there were fifty if it had been you."

"Ten acres of dogs would be a great many thousands. Have you any idea how many?"
Andrew did not like to calculate, for it occurred to him what a small space ten or fifteen thousand sheep would occupy when camping, and ten acres of dogs would be past calculation.

"But," his father continued, "I know of no better way to break you of the foolish habit of exaggerating than to tell the children of the trouble you had in going after the colt. You ran like lightning, encountered ten acres of dogs, which would be hundreds of thousands, traveled more than a dozen miles to get one and a half miles in a straight line, expected to find five thousand people here to examine your new velocipede, and when you reached home you were nearly dead!"

"Please don't, father, the boys and girls will all laugh themselves to death; and I wouldn't as Methusalem."
"Linger themselves to death at a simple story like this? I hope not, but rather hope it will set them to watching their own manner of telling stories, so as to be sure they do not greatly overstate things. Habit, my son, grows with years, and becomes in time so deeply rooted that it will be impossible for you, when you become a man, to relate plain, unvarnished facts, unless you check that foolish habit in which you indulge every day of stretching simple incidents into the marvelous tales."—Eg.

The Broach Murder.

Last week we briefly noted the greach murder at Pilot Mountain, Surry county, and gave the name of the parties as Broach instead of Brooch. The particulars are given in full by the Mt. Airy News and we reproduce what that paper says of the unfortunate affair:

"It was about 2 o'clock in the afternoon of March 15th that a pistol shot was heard in the house of J. T. Broach. Immediately after Broach ran out of the house and told those whom he met that his wife had shot herself. Several people went immediately into the house and the sight which met their eyes as they crossed the threshold was one they will never forget. Near the door lay young Mrs. Broach in the last agony of death. Not far away, in its cradle, lay her little, innocent nine-months old babe, with a fair face covered with the life blood of its dead mother. There was blood on its clothing, blood every where. How the dread deed was committed no one knows except Broach himself. Broach says he was lying on the bed and that his wife shot herself, but whether it was accidental or intentional he claims not to know. Immediately after he ran out of the house, when the pistol shot was heard, he went to the telegraph office and wired his wife's parents but his wife had been shot. The woman's death was in the back of the head, behind the left ear, the ball ranging to the right. Dr. Banner, the coroner, was summoned immediately and an inquest was held. In the opinion of the officers of the law the evidence was thought sufficient to warrant the arrest of Broach on the charge of killing his wife and he was placed in custody. He was afterwards released on $400 bail, his bondsmen being Dr. J. B. Smith and Henry Whitaker.

Mrs. Broach was only nineteen years old, and was a Miss Pender, her parents living at East Bend, Yadkin county. Broach is about thirty-five years old and has been twice married.
When found Mrs. Broach was lying near the door of the room, some distance from the bed. The pistol was found on the bed under the pillow. Broach is said to have been drinking for several days prior to this tragedy.

Mrs. Broach was buried Saturday at East Bend, the funeral being preached by Rev. C. C. Haymore. She was a member of the Baptist Church and a woman of lovely character.
The evidence seems to be that Mrs. Broach was shot just as she was preparing to give her baby a bath. By her chair in front of the fire was a vessel with water, soap and a wash cloth, and on another chair hung the little one's clothes. While bending over her baby the fatal shot must have been fired. When found the baby was lying across the cradle, not in it. Saturday afternoon Broach was re-arrested at East Bend and a posse of ten men carried him back to Pilot Mountain, whence he was conveyed to jail at Dobson.

At Surry Court the past week the Grand Jury found a true bill for murder in the first degree against J. T. Broach. He pleaded not guilty of the charge in bill of indictment. The case was, by agreement of counsel, postponed until the next term of Court. The sentiment is quite strong against the prisoner.—Winston Republican.

The Flying Machine.

At a recent meeting of the Physical Society, Berlin, Prof. Du Bois Reymond, president, spoke on Lillenthal's experiments on flying. As a starting point he had chosen the study of the flight of birds, which may be divided into three distinct kinds—flapping, steering and soaring. Of these the one demanding least expenditure of energy is soaring, and investigation showed that under certain conditions flight is possible if the wing possesses a vertical component. Experiments showed that surfaces can acquire a horizontal motion by the action of the wind only when their curvature bears a certain relation to their superficies, and that this relation corresponds exactly to that which is observed in the wings of birds. Dr. Lillenthal's flying machine consists of a convexly curved surface whose area is 12 square meters, made by stretching linen over a light wooden frame and having a weight of about 20 kilos. Its center is an aperture for the experimenter's body, and the apparatus is held in position by the person's arms. On running rapidly down a gentle slope of a hill against the wind, the latter soon acquires a vertical component, which then carries the flying apparatus and propels it in a direction against the wind. The speaker had seen Dr. Lillenthal sail over a space of about 120 meters, at an altitude of some thirty meters, in a matter of a few minutes, and it was possible to cover some 200 to 500 meters, and Dr. Du Bois Reymond had himself taken a few leaps through the air of 20 to 30 meters and a singular condition. He was of opinion that by practical better results may be obtained as regards soaring, and that then, by combining steering with soaring it will be possible to fly even when the wind is unfavorable. It appears that the three essentials for the solution of the problem of flight are: (1) correct utilization of the wind; (2) the correct shape of the supporting surfaces; and (3) correct handling of the apparatus.—Scientific American.

The Seigniorage.

The exact definition of the term Seigniorage as applied to the silver bullion owned by the government, as clear as can be given, is the following from the New York Post:
"Seigniorage is that part of any given amount of bullion brought to the mint for coinage by private individuals, which is taken by the seignior, the lord, the sovereign, or the state, as a compensation for coining it for them. It may be merely the actual cost of coining, in which case the seigniorage is nominal. Real seigniorage is where the sum charged or taken from the bullion is in excess of the cost. It is usually very small. Under the coinage act of 1873 the seigniorage on gold was fixed on one-fifth of one per cent. There was no seigniorage on silver, except for trade dollars, because none was coined for private persons. The charge for coining trade dollars was the actual cost of the work at the mint where the coining was done. It is a misuse of the word seigniorage to apply it to a case where private individuals do not bring bullion to the mint, but where the government buys bullion and coins the same for its own account. It is in the latter case, however, that the term is used in the bill. According to this bill, the seigniorage is the difference between the price paid for the bullion and the number of standard dollars of 412 1/2 grains each that can be produced from it."—Charlotte Observer.

A Righteous Conclusion.
There is a little doubt about the fact that Madeline is a smart girl as there is about the fact that she is a tough one.
The say Col. Brickbridge isn't worth a dollar, and while she may even succeed in turning the turnip in jail, it is tolerably safe to say that she is not a phony as on her when she said she would break it off opening prayer meetings and of addressing seminaries for young ladies.—Charlotte Observer.

Also to Ex-Confederate soldiers and sailors everywhere to form themselves into local associations, and send application to these Headquarters for papers to organize in time to participate in the great Reunion, and thus unite with their comrades in carrying out the laudable and philanthropic objects of the organization.
Business of the greatest importance will demand careful consideration during the fourth annual Convention—such as the best methods of securing impartial history, and to enlist each State in the compilation and preservation of the history of her Citizen soldiery; the benevolent care through State aid or otherwise of disabled, destitute or aged Veterans and the widows and orphans of our fallen brothers-in-arms; the care of the graves of our known and unknown dead buried at Gettysburg, Fort Warren, Camps Morton, Chase, Douglas, Oakland Cemetery at Chicago, Johnson's Island, Cairo and at all other points, to see that they are annually decorated, the headstones preserved and protected, and complete lists of the names of our dead heroes with the location of their last resting places furnished to their friends and relatives through the medium of our camps, thus rescuing their names from oblivion and handing them down in history; the consideration of the different movements, plans and means to erect a monument to the memory of Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States of America, also to aid in building monuments to other great leaders, soldiers and sailors of the South; to aid in securing a pension from the States lately composing the Confederate States for Mrs. Jefferson Davis; to make such changes in the constitution and by laws as experience may suggest, and other matters of general interest.
